Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. I believe last year in his estimates he indicated that standardization of traffic signals throughout the province of Ontario was the responsibility of his department. We know from travelling on some of the newer highways, the traffic signal that is very, very easy to see. We turn off these highways into our towns, villages and cities, and we find the traffic signals are quite a bit smaller and maybe a little harder to see and we have some of our citizens having accidents, not noticing these signals.

I know these devices are very costly to the towns and villages, but I do realize it is a hardship too, for some of our citizens when they have accidents, where they lose their licence, sometimes for 15 days, by going through a red light, also having to pay a fine and filling up some points on their demerit system.

I would just like the hon. Minister to outline what has developed since last year in bringing about the standardization of traffic signals throughout the province.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the broad question I might say in a friendly fashion to my hon. friend over there that maybe he and some of us are getting older each year and maybe that is the explanation for us not—

Mr. Spence: That could be true.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —and as the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) said the other day, no doubt all of us secretly pine and endeavour to check the passage of time. However, subsection 14 of section 70 of The Highway Traffic Act provides for standardization of all signal light traffic-control systems installed after April 9, 1936. It describes the colours, it describes the way they shall be mounted and suspended and their location on the side of the roadway and in relation to intersecting roadways and other matters. It also sets a minimum distance of nine feet below which the system cannot be installed.

We tried to standardize these things and establish uniformity in all the municipalities but we have to be reasonable and many of these municipalities—I know of none that I could cite as an example, but we are interested in preserving the autonomy of the municipality—they have their own councils and similarly they have their problems about budgets and getting their estimates through just as I have, and so on.

But sometimes, as the hon. member has said, the cost involved is a factor, and somewhere down the middle of the line there is a solution which must in the name of common sense meet the needs of the public and the needs of the municipalities responsible for it. I am sure that the good sense of the elected representatives can meet this problem effectively.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, on vote 2003, under item No. 4, highway safety publicity, I notice in the public accounts—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Are we not on vote 2004 now?

Mr. Innes: No, no, vote 2003, highway safety publicity. In the public accounts we see items in the thousands of dollars—Kelly, $89,000, McKim, $113,000. What main publicity is the department involved in; what are the main items, that the publicity is so high—in the region of $325,000?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am glad the hon. member asked that question because in the present estimates of this current year coming up we are asking for almost $372,000 for the advertising and the publicity total. This will be made up in this fashion. We estimate our requirements in newspapers at $24,900. Miscellaneous publications at $2,000. We estimate our need for outdoor posters and transportation cards at $38,000. They have been a very effective method of keeping the safety subject before the public. Radio and television have been extremely rewarding, if such a phrase is suitable to this topic under discussion. Radio and television, $59,000. Road safety workshops, $28,000. We are having four or five of them in the outlying parts of the province. Displays, Canadian National Exhibition and others, $7,000. Odd pamphlets, drivers' handbooks, and so on, $121,000; and campaign material $88,000. It all comes to $371,000.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I will tell the hon. members. We do not even get any personal marks out of it. Most of this stuff which these fellows in my department produce, they do not even put my name on it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there is one question I wanted to ask. I do not know whether it comes into this estimate or not. My attention was drawn to the fact that we have an overall law in the province which stipulates that vehicles must stop when a school bus has stopped; and it is printed on the school bus.

This is the case, that when you come into a town—in one instance in one town which I will not bother naming, they have a by-law which, in effect, contravenes this. And when the school buses come into the town they actually have to cover up this printing. Now, surely, this is not only an anomaly, this is an absurdity, that the provincial law can be contravened by a local by-law, necessitating this kind of action when the matter of safety is involved.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, Mr. Chairman, I suppose that this is one of those situations where the phrase, the law of the mass applies. Now the situation which was raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is very important because we are dealing with problems in built-up areas, problems which are suburban on one hand and on the other hand, problems and situations which may involve vacant land, but contained within the confines of the city.

Now this situation involves the application of two different rules, and the problem is that the motorist's and the school bus drivers, where different rules apply—no one knows where the rules start and finish, but it is a legitimate problem and it is one that we in government have faced. It is one which arises from the normal growth and expansion of our community, and the growth and expansion of the province itself. And so on that basis, it is the kind of problem of which I hope we have many to face in the future.

Now, the solution will be implemented by legislation and, having in mind the very situation and trying to cut through these limits and what jurisdiction you are in—whether the school bus sign should be flipped up or flipped down, and things like that—I hope we shall secure approval for an amendment to the Act dealing with school bus lights, which will place the onus for flashing the lights in the hands of the operator of the school bus who, as a professional operator, will know the route he is on and which zone he is in. When the school bus lights flash, that is the warning for the following traffic, or such traffic that is concerned, to stop. It seems to be a simple cut-through, and that is the type of thing that, when we polish up the wording, I will be presenting to the highway safety committee.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions to ask of the hon. Minister. What part of the highways in the province of Ontario are considered the most dangerous from the accident point of view? Are there any statistics at all? What highways from what city to what city?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is he speaking about the technical category of Kings' highways?

Mr. Newman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I would have to say that I could not specify them, but I would be glad to secure the information and send it to the hon. member. Probably the King's highways of the 21-foot-width type involving sharp curves and so on—this is a highways matter, as a matter of fact, in the sense of design and construction. They are trying to eliminate those situations, and one of the tests of priority, which I believe The Department of Highways applies in proceeding with its work, would be the incidence of accidents on any given road.

Mr. Newman: I thank the hon. Minister. I will bring that up when we take up the estimates of The Department of Highways. Is there any control at all over the brightness of the turn-signal of a car? In other words, say the wattage of the lamp involved in the turning? Must it be, say, 10-watt, 5-watt. Any controls at all on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, we do control that, but we do not control it in the terms which you describe. The Act provides for the turning light to be visible at a distance of 100 feet.

Mr. Newman: Is there any consideration on the part of the department to the use of an amber light as is common in Europe for a turn-signal?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The question of uniformity between Europe and the North American continent with respect to lights and other devices, equipment and traffic signs, and so on, is, along with other matters, one which is constantly before us. While, on the one hand, there is a trend to do certain things on the North American continent as one zone, and in Europe on the other, still the influence of the patterns which have been established in Europe are gradually coming over to this continent. With respect to the colour of these turning-lights, I have to say that this is one subject where the manufacturers are looking at the European system and are presently contemplating the introduction of the amber light as standard equipment on this continent, but I cannot give any dates.

Mr. Newman: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, one other question here. Has the department ever considered experimenting with "scramble-corners"? Corners at which the lights would turn red for all directions and the pedestrian could cross in any direction whatsoever. This would facilitate the movement of traffic considerably.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, we have not, as a department, experimented with this system of free-for-all within the four square corners of an intersection, but other places have, including Metropolitan Toronto, and our department has observed the results with a great deal of interest. Some of the hon. members will remember the commotion that took place at the corner of Bay and Richmond Streets when for a period of, I guess, a year this situation was permitted to exist. All I can say is that confusion reigned supreme, and if we think we have trouble with crosswalks, let us leave this freedom, that the hon. member is raising, alone.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, one other question. Has the department considered setting aside the yellow colour to be used solely for school buses and prohibited the possible use of that colour on trucks so that a school bus could be readily identified by its colour, or some colour coding of the bus, then?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, we have not.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions and one deals with a matter which, I think, is important. It is the matter of ambulances. I am wondering if the department has done any research. I understand that some areas are without ambulance service partially because the high cost of providing that service is beyond the means of the municipality in which the ambulance is situated. It seems to me that if there is insufficient ambulance service, of course, it could operate to the detriment of people being injured in those areas.

It has been brought to my attention, as well, that there are not in Ontario any regulations which govern ambulances. I am told that it is possible, for instance, to get a station wagon and put a stretcher in it and set oneself up in the ambulance business, and perhaps the driver or the operator is not qualified in first aid. It may not have such equipment as oxygen and other things which would be of extreme importance under certain circumstances.

I wonder if the department has considered this matter and whether The Department of Transport anticipates any regulations with respect to ambulance service; whether or not they feel that it is important, perhaps in certain cases, to even in one way or another subsidize this service to ensure that it is available throughout all parts of the province. I wonder if there is any thought, for instance, to licensing ambulances? I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us what his department has considered in this matter.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the nature of the subject matter to which the hon. member refers, but in its essence the question of the operation and the availability of ambulances is a municipal matter. From the manner in which I have dealt with my estimates, the hon. member will understand that I am not endeavouring to slough something off in any deliberate fashion. But I think the onus properly lies in the municipal field, having to do with the grant system and the respective needs, which differ from place to place, for—I do not like the word “welfare”—but it is probably comparable to the subject matter we are talking about.

With respect to our highways themselves, the programme of installing and equipping Highway 401 with rest stations and so on will be going ahead a pace in the immediate future. But in the meantime on certain of our highways The Department of Highways does operate patrols constantly to render assistance and first aid as the occasion may indicate. It seems to me that there was no criticism that should be levelled at anybody who got into the ambulance business by way of a station wagon converted, because the reason some of these services are not available to the municipalities is the high cost of the custom-built ambulance and the refusal of the local municipalities to pay the rates demanded. So that if some more practical albeit smaller unit were developed and utilized at a lower cost, Mr. Chairman, then the solution might be somewhat closer.

We do not license as transport the operation of ambulances. We do give them the right to use the red flashing light with fire and police vehicles. I would have to speak for myself on this matter. From my experience, anyone engaged in the ambulance business as a professional is usually of a very sincere and dedicated nature and someone who responds to the responsibilities which his occupation requires.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me a good many municipalities, particularly smaller municipalities, would not be equipped to know what standards they should insist on. It seems to me that these are standards which should come from the provincial level.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: If the hon. member has any examples in mind, if he would kindly refer them to me I will see that the necessary advice, instruction and information is made available to them.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if we should leave the matter of hospital standards and all these other standards up to the municipalities, it seems to me that the provincial government does dictate certain minimum standards. In bringing it to the attention of the hon. Minister, I do not have any particular samples and I would be very foolish to state that I have samples of certain municipalities which do not insist on standards, other than to say that the mayor of Hamilton was quite surprised, some few years ago and publicly said so, when he needed to go to the hospital in a hurry and was taken there in one of these converted ambulances which he felt to be inadequate.

I think the leadership should come from the province, because I do not think in many cases that the municipalities have either the time or the staff or the money to insist on these standards.

My hon. friend from York Centre (Mr. Singer) has just advised me that there is not any power in The Municipal Act to license ambulances. This raises another point which I did not know about. If that be so, I think it indicates all the greater responsibility on the province to see that something is done about these standards.

I would like to raise the matter with respect to education in the high schools: instruction. I wonder if the hon. Minister—I think last year he told us there were some 48 secondary schools that now were giving driver instruction at the high school level. I notice it is a contentious issue particularly with the educators.

On the other hand I note in reading the select committee report on highway safety that this was one of the issues with which they dealt extensively. The statistics that seem to be coming through now indicate that there is a considerably smaller accident ratio among drivers that are trained in these schools. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us what is being done in the high schools to teach safety. How many schools are now engaged in driver training, and with respect to the ones which are not engaged in driver training, would he tell us what is done at the school level to teach this matter of safety to the students in theory if not in practice?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: At the moment there are 57 schools in Ontario presently providing courses in driver instruction in preparation for their driver's examination test. During 1961, 11 schools started new courses. It is anticipated that a number, an increasing number of schools, will start courses in September of 1962. This delay appears due in part to a shortage of qualified instructors and a major effort is being put forth to interest suitable persons in taking this instructor's course, the next one of which will commence in July of this year.

There are certain requirements for instructors: they must be graduates of some recognized course for instructors in high school driver instruction, and behind-the-wheel instructors must be licensed by The Department of Transport.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Would the hon. Minister be able to tell us, for instance, in the 57 schools I think he quoted that are now sponsoring this instruction, what percentage is that of the overall number of secondary schools in the province?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is 57 out of 450 secondary schools in Ontario and that would appear to be about 12 per cent.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the matter in the estimate for grants, I see there is a grant here—there are three of them in the highway safety branch, and then I noted in referring to the estimates of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) there is also a grant there to the safety council. Now the question I should like to ask is: is there any duplication in these grants, are they to the same councils and on what basis are they granted and in what way do they overlap with the grants in The Department of the Attorney-General?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would have to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not know anything about the grants in The Department of the Attorney-General. Now, I know and I am familiar with the work of the three organizations which our department assists and I would have to say my impression would be, that there is no duplication with respect to the hon. Attorney-General's budget or any previous grants he has made. I think they are separate subjects of a different type and nature. I am instructed that any grants of The Department of the Attorney-General are not to the same organizations in which The Department of Transport is interested.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I think the earlier remarks made, amplified the statements I made this afternoon about co-operation. On the one hand he says he does not know anything about the grants in The Department of the Attorney-General, which clearly states that they are for safety councils.

I think this amplifies the statement about lack of co-operation which I think appears to exist.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member cannot make a statement like that and get away with it. I am looking at the estimates of The Department of the Attorney-General, and his grants have to do with local safety councils. There is no duplication there, or lack of knowledge.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would have to disagree, of course, with the remarks of the hon. Minister because I have here a copy of his report. One of the matters which is discussed under this report is the extent of co-operation which exists between his department and the local councils.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not necessarily by way of money. We do not give any money to local safety councils.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am only pointing out that there is an overlapping of responsibility here. If safety is the interest of The Department of Transport, then I am wondering why on earth the hon. Attorney-General is going around dishing out grants to local safety councils?

I am suggesting that there is an overlapping here and that if it deals with safety—and if I interpret the functions of The Department of Transport correctly, it is their responsibility to deal with these matters—and I am surprised the hon. Minister did not have more knowledge of the grants that are in the hon. Attorney-General's department. I do not wish to pursue it any further.

I just would like to ask a question with respect to the matter of the increase in traffic accidents and fatalities, I believe, which took place this year. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell me whether or not there is any relationship between those and the higher speed limits which, in general, have been proclaimed throughout Ontario over the past couple of years. It has been a progressive thing. I wonder if the hon. Minister has any statistics dealing with this matter of higher speeds and the frequency of accidents?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would like to correct the hon. member. If he had listened accurately and closely this afternoon he would have heard me say that there was a decrease in the number of accidents by 2 per cent in 1961 over the previous year. There was an increase in the number of fatalities and I have no knowledge at the moment as to whether or not increased speed is a contributing factor.

It is my opinion—and from the experience I have gained in the department as Minister and from my association with people who are experts in this field—it is my personal and private opinion that there is not necessarily a direct relationship for which speed could be given as the immediate and effective cause or reason for the accidents. I do not think we can be quite that precise. But my impression is that we could not come to that conclusion.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. Minister that it is possible to have statistics of where these accidents occurred, to determine whether or not there has been any increase in accidents in the areas where the speed limit has been raised in the past year. I do not think this is a matter of opinion, I think it is a matter which statistics should be able to tell us.

Now, with respect to listening to him this afternoon, I would just like to get this little parting shot in in answer to him. If we had been given the accident statistics in time I would not have needed to listen so closely to him.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, before you pass on to the next item, I would like to ask one question of the hon. Minister, and in order to abbreviate it I am going to take the prerogative, if you will, of addressing the hon. Minister directly. You are familiar, Mr. Minister, with the Nepean problem and the Marysville home and school situation. Now I know this will not enlighten the House as such but because of the hour I am going to address the hon. Minister directly. Has anything been done about that situation?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That was another situation having to do with suburban development, where people went into the suburbs and lived on larger sized lots, which in total did not constitute a built-up area, leading to the speed limit problem. There was an accident down in Marysville last summer. In fact, I think it was last June, yes, just before the summer. It was a sad situation, requiring effective changes in the legislation, and those changes are being brought forward.

I think that now that has been raised—and, after all, it is only 10.50 p.m.—I might take a few minutes of your time, Mr. Chairman, and refer to this subject because this is a good example of the type of difficult, emotional, heartbreaking problem that arises out of some accidents. The situation was this: There was a school bus which had loaded children to take them home when school was finished, and one little boy, as the bus pulled away, went up to the driver and said he had forgotten his hat or his gloves or some such thing as that, and prevailed on the driver to pull off to the side to permit the boy to get out and go back into the building to get the gloves or whatever it was.

The boy got out of the bus, went around the front of the bus and stopped and looked up to his left, up the side of the bus, and to the right. A car was coming on his left so he stopped right where he was. In the meantime, there was a little girl on the bus who, having found that the bus was going to stop for the reasons I have given, went up to the driver and asked if she could go. This was a perfectly normal request from a little girl. She had left a jar of tadpoles in the school and she wanted to run back and get them.

So the bus driver agreed and she got out and, as she got out the door, she did not do what the little boy had done. She ran across the front of the bus and across the road past the little boy who was still standing there. She did not look and she was killed, and the speed of the car had nothing to do with it. There was a question of probable civil liability with respect to the flashing of the lights. On the report of this sad accident we immediately contacted the hon. Attorney-General's department and an inquest was held.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The point I wanted to make was, do you consider it within your prerogative to change the speed limit? Now, I understand that the home and school group in that area requested that the speed limit in the school zone be reduced from 60 miles an hour—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There was no authority in me as a Minister to make that change. It has to be done by statute.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Do you think it is advisable that you should have that authority?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I am beginning to wonder, maybe it should be. Although from my experience of suspended drivers, in which instance neither the department nor the Minister has any authority to waive the suspension, it is a very desirable position to be in.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, is it fair to ask whether you contemplate bringing into this Legislature this session any legislation—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Legislation will be advanced to change that situation based on the Marysville experience which will be applicable to all of Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, is it fair to ask whether you contemplate bringing into this Legislature this session any legislation—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Legislation will be advanced to change that situation based on the Marysville experience which will be applicable to all of Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And permit a reduction in the speed limit where that seemed advisable?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question with regard to the appointment of licence issuers. I am sorry to bring in a note of criticism at this stage of the day, but after all they—the chief commissioner of liquor over here smiles, because when we raised this kind of thing the other day he polished his halo and said this government had nothing to do with this kind of thing. It was all done above the board. However, I want to read a couple of paragraphs here:

For years motorists resident in the Beaches district, in fact, those of the whole east end of Toronto, have had only one licence bureau from which to get their licence. Unless, of course, they went out of the suburbs or down-town. With the appointment of Christ Stavero, a licence issuer at 283 Scarborough Road at Kingston Road, this picture has changed. In fact, it was on the recommendation of Jack Harris, the Progressive-Conservative candidate, that this appointment was made.

I want to congratulate the hon. member. He really got operating before he was in the House. I have heard of defeated Tory candidates who have control of the issuance of patronage, but apparently this is a power that one acquires immediately upon nomination.

The hon. Minister nods affirmatively. I was reading from a journal that is published—the Beaches Tribune of January 4, 1962. The editor likely was at the meeting.

I am not going to pursue this, since we all know it is part and parcel of the operations of the government, but my question to the hon. Minister is: how many issuers of licences are there for example in the Metro area, and what is the basis upon which they get their remuneration? Is it a standard basis across the board? So much per licence, and if so, what is it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The situation is this. The licence issuers are commissioned agents. They are paid the following rates of commission, which is standard across the province. For a vehicle permit, 35 cents; for a driver or chauffeur's licence, 15 cents; for a transfer 15 cents; and an in-transit permit 10 cents. In addition to that they are required to be appointed as agents of The Treasury Department for purpose of enforcing the sales tax Act and are required to make certain reports in connection therewith.

There are 19, I am told in the Metropolitan Toronto area. This is a matter which I have looked at very closely because we just cannot put new appointees in one area, or in some area, where they would like to be appointed. It has to bear some relationship to a "spread" system and a proper deal across the area, or whether it is a county, or across Metropolitan Toronto.

The other requirements are, and we are laying down basic rules and standards. For instance we still have in Ontario some of the issuers writing licences in long-hand, which in a small community is quite legitimate. But with the number of new Canadians and the odd spelling of many words, handwriting is not a satisfactory method of making a record for departmental purposes, or indeed for any purpose of the like. Accordingly, I may as well state these standards now publicly, these issuers are required to remain open in accordance with the local hours of business 12 months of the year and must be staffed. They must not be locked up.

In areas which have a small population and a small volume of business, such a commission operation is not lucrative and can only operate in conjunction with, shall we say, a dry-goods store or some other set-up. But preferably, and for some years I am told, and certainly as far as I am concerned, no branch operator will ever be appointed again as an issuer, because this operator has too much information on his competitors and it is not right.

Mr. Chairman, at no time, did I—I have met Mr. Staverio, as a matter of fact I interviewed him myself—but I would like to tell hon. members that at no time did I personally ever speak to Mr. Harris about Mr. Staverio or ask his advice because I think I am quite competent, with my department, in finding where the correct locations should be. That is our business and if we do not know enough about where these locations should be sited, then we should not hold the positions we do. Now, I understand—

Mr. MacDonald: Do I get this correctly, that he as the hon. Minister actually does the interviewing and decides who is going to get the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I met Mr. Staverio, and we called for a review of the entire eastern district of Toronto to examine the population and location factors. Mr. Staverio originally wanted to locate in another position, but we told him that we would not approve it. His original location was in some place that was not acceptable.

Mr. MacDonald: Did the hon. Minister advertise, or is it handled through the civil service commission?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, it is not. They make application to the department. I would say the turnover of this sort of thing is at a very low ebb and most situations arise with the people in the towns across the province, where the husband or the man who has been doing it dies, we try to arrange, if it is possible, to carry on and take into account some of those personal factors.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to follow up on this point with the hon. Minister, if it is all right. May I ask the hon. Minister if it was pure coincidence that Mr. Staverio, whom I take it was judged to be the best qualified, best equipped person to obtain this privilege, if it was pure coincidence that, in the making of that decision, he is an active and prominent Conservative in the east end of Toronto? I believe he used to be a Liberal, but for some years he has been noted mainly for his activities on behalf of the Conservative Party. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if that was a factor in his decision, as to the superior qualifications of Mr. Staverio.

I would also like to ask the hon. Minister if Mr. Jeffrey, the publisher of the weekly newspaper in which this report appeared, himself quite a strong Conservative—I know him well and like him very well—if he was totally mistaken then in this particular piece of information which he circulated in Beaches constituency two weeks before the by-election day, giving credit to the Progressive-Conservative candidate, or some measure of credit for this?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I never heard of the newspaper. I never heard of the publisher. If I have met him I would not recognize him again and I have never had any communication with him about what it was he put in his newspaper.

Vote 2003 agreed to.

On vote 2004:

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister did give us the schedule of rates in regard to plates and permits, and so on. Do the issuers also get an allowance for office space?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. That is the gross commission payable—

Mr. Manley: They have to furnish their own office space?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They furnish the office, supply typewriters and staff.

Mr. Newman: Do recommendations go out from the department to the issuer of licence permits to encourage him to stay open late in the evening—say, possibly, late Saturday night, especially now that there will be a rush for licence plates? Does the department recommend that they stay open in some areas?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They are supposed to stay open in conformity with the local hours during which the other businesses are open. Now, this is a matter where a little common-sense goes a long way. And since these people are paid on commission, it is to their own interest to stay open and supply this service to the public, particularly at this time of year. And if they do not do it, then they are the ones, as well as the public, who suffer.

Now, to give you an example: Most agency offices have agreed to remain open beyond the usual closing hours during the last couple of days if the need arises. This has not been necessary during the last two years. The extended office hours during the peak period at offices which are staffed by our department are as follows: Port Credit, Friday one week, Friday the next week, 9 p.m. both nights; Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 12, 13 and 14, 9 p.m. Oshawa, 9 p.m. on both Fridays, March 2 and 9. Hamilton, 8 p.m. on Monday, March 12 and Tuesday, March 13. It is not advertised but they will do it as long as business warrants. In Stratford, Friday, March 9, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 12, 13 and 14, 8 p.m. And I think that is a good sample across the province.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): There is one question I would like to ask the hon. Minister and that is in respect to weigh stations. How many were guilty of overloading during the past year, and how are the penalties imposed? Perhaps the hon. Minister does not have that information.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I happen to have it. While the information is bubbling to the surface, the situation is this, that the weigh scales are operated on what we call an audit basis. No scale is necessarily open 24 hours a day. It is a spot check, but a nicer phrase is "operated on an audit basis" and that describes it generally. All told, last year there were over a million vehicles inspected through our inspection service, and with less than 1 per cent of overload.

Mr. Thomas: What were the penalties imposed?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: By laying charges, and one of the requirements with respect to each of our inspectors, having regard to his education, is that he goes to court and gives the evidence, and so on. It is not economic for these fellows to have to go to court very often.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, do driver-examination centres have set office hours?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, they have the regular civil service hours. They are civil servants.

Mr. Newman: I would suggest that the hon. Minister take into consideration that possibly they be open or be staffed in some way to enable individuals to try their tests on a Saturday afternoon, because it is quite difficult sometimes for an individual who works till 5 o'clock, five days a week to get down to an office centre for his test. And if they were open Saturday afternoons it certainly would facilitate the opportunity of taking a test.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have looked into this and I am satisfied that, while the point is properly raised, to accede to the request of the hon. member would only compound the problems we presently have. People would leave it to the Saturday and we would be all jammed up with civil servants overworked on one day and doing nothing the rest of the week. Driving an automobile is a privilege, it is a life-time occupation and privilege, and we will make appointments for these people so they can arrange for time off, which is little enough to do to get this privilege.

Mr. Newman: Well, that is all well and good but I have had complaints from my own locality where individuals cannot get down before the regular closing hours and are at a handicap. They have to take time off from work to get down, and I certainly think that we can stagger working hours in such a fashion so that we do not work the employees overtime, and still convenience the public.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, just a couple of questions with respect to these abstracts on driving records. I wonder, are they equally available to all those who apply? I understand there is some discrimination on the part of the department as to who is to be charged and who is not. Who is entitled to that?

I am thinking, for instance, of an insurance company, perhaps in the course of litigation and wanting to know something about the driving record of a party on the other side, or perhaps a solicitor. Is the driving record freely available to everyone who requests it—when I say “freely” I perhaps used the wrong choice of words—is it available to everyone who requests it, and is the charge the same in all cases?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answers are: (a) yes and (b) no. (a) it is available—and that is a good answer, it relates to the question—but the (b) no, everyone is not charged the same. No police authority is charged for that information, but others are. If the hon. member or I went in, we would have to pay.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: With respect to the item in the report of the hon. Minister—of the 1960 report dealing with the checking of bus schedules, to see that they comply with those schedules—I think there was an article in there. I am wondering what it meant by that. Do they go out and check to make sure that they are on time, or what is meant by that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is a department function and it has to do with the scheduling of passenger buses and inspection of their operations to see that they are not operating on a basis which necessitates constant abuse or any abuse of the safety laws.

Mr. R. W. Gibson (Kenora): I should like to inquire of the hon. Minister as to the number of employees of his department operating in the district of Kenora. I should also like to know what functions they fulfil.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, in recent years the northwestern part of Ontario has seen great economic expansion, and I might say on my own account outside this memo, that, in spite of the nature of the representation which the riding has had, this government—under this administration and the previous Tory administration—has continued with this programme of capital works.

With the completion of the Ontario portion of the Trans-Canada Highway commercial vehicle operations into and through the province have increased. As a result of this and at the request of the transport industry in the area, uniformed officers of the department have been located in northwestern Ontario to provide a similar service to that which has been furnished for many years by the department in the southern part of the province.

These officers have been trained to assist the licensed commercial carrier, to protect him from unlicensed competition, and to assist the public generally. They are also qualified driver-examiners. Officers operating from our Dryden office service the Sioux Lookout and Red Lake areas. Others operating from the Kenora office cover the Kenora and Rainy River districts, and I make no reference. These have to do with inspectors, driver-examiners, but not licence or permit issuers.

Mr. Gibson: I should like to ask the hon. Minister as to the number of uniformed officers who are fulfilling these functions on the highways we have heard of and where they are located and what their names are.

I would like to advise the hon. Minister that despite his remarks about the development of northwestern Ontario and the functions of his department in that area, I served as an official of this government in the capacity of assistant Crown attorney and I happen to know, Mr. Chairman, that we saw one official of the department in the town of Dryden during the time I was there. That gentleman served there for a period of approximately one month and vanished. I still live in Dryden and I do not know where this person is or who is acting for the hon. Minister's department as a uniformed official on the highway.

Let me add this point, sir. We have provincial police in Dryden who have been performing the same functions for a good many years and are still capable of fulfilling these same functions with no additional cost to the taxpayers of this province.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We will agree.

Mr. Gibson: What does the hon. Minister know about it? He has not been up there in a coon's age.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have given the explanation that the inspectors are on an audit and travelling basis and it is not in the public interests for me to disclose the names of those who may or may not be assigned to work in any specific area.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: If I was the member up there I would know.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What estimate are we on?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2004:

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, on the question of issuers of licences: is the hon. Minister acquainted with the fact that they have a new one in Fort Erie? Is the hon. Minister acquainted with that gentleman?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is something strikes a familiar note up here but I cannot—the message is not coming through.

Mr. Bukator: I will give it to the hon. Minister very bluntly. The man happens to be the president of the Conservative Party in Fort Erie. He got the job of issuer of licences, and do hon. members know who announced the fact that he did get that job—a member of the parks commission and a hard worker in the Conservative government. I had to read that in the paper.

Now I would like to know: is it not proper to send the member in that riding at least a confirmation of that fact before we read it in the paper?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not necessarily so. But so far as I am concerned as Minister, when I go around I try to give hon. members on the other side a pretty good shake whenever we have an opening in the driving centre, whether it is in Brantford, Cornwall, Walkerton, Niagara Falls. I usually let hon. members opposite cut the ribbons and buy them a free meal.

Mr. Bukator: I did not get my question answered. But the fact remains that the hon. Minister is familiar with the fact that this gentleman was the president of the Conservative government.

An hon. member: The Conservative government?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not know the man at all. Could the hon. member give me the date of his appointment? When was it?

Mr. Bukator: I do not recall.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Was it during my term of office?

Mr. Bukator: I am asking the hon. Minister, he has got his records before him.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have not got that. I will take notice of it and get the answer.

Mr. Bukator: He was a very capable Conservative. He did a good job for the hon. Minister and apparently he is doing a good job for him.

The question I ask is: is it proper for the hon. Minister's department to send a ward heeler with the information that he can publish it to the paper before the member gets it? This is the question I asked.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like ask the hon. Minister a question that last year we brought to his attention: that reducing price of licences for farm trucks would serve a great purpose for the agricultural industry, also the truck industry. By looking at him from this side of the House I thought we had made an impression on him and I wonder if he is going to take that into consideration at this session.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is a rather interesting subject that has been raised. I have spent a lot of time this past year looking into this question of reduced licences for farmers, and quite frankly I find that in spite of the references to other jurisdictions which anybody may make, I can find no satisfactory basis for reducing licences or issuing them on a seasonal basis which would not immediately be invoked by the cheese processors, the tomato growers, the carrot producers and other specialized industries, including soda pop and ice cream. As a result I do not see how it can be done.

Further to this, there was reference by one of the hon. members, and I am not sure whether it was this hon. member who raised the question or not, but someone referred me to Michigan and what they did for the farmers. Well, sir, I got an eyeful when I got hold of the legislation—

An hon. member: They do it better over there.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They are just equal, only they compute the fee on a different basis and they are better politicians than we are. The fees in Michigan are within 50 cents and $1 for farm trucks, the same as they are in Ontario.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, I think about two years ago the present hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) asked about this. He was quite serious about this situation and said that he would do everything on his part to bring it to the attention of his government. He is now the Minister of Agriculture, I want to know if the hon. Minister of Transport shares his views.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have the highest regard for the hon. Minister. He and I have many conversations about the business of government and usually we are in agreement.

Mr. Innes: In the public accounts for last year I notice an item for fees to the extent of $89,000. There are two firms listed here and they account for about $9,000; the others are $80,400. What would constitute $80,000 of fees?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That was dealt with, I think, in the hon. member's absence.

Mr. Innes: No, it was not. This is in motor vehicles administration.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is what was answered. It had to do with fees on the unsatisfied judgment fund.

An hon. member: Run through it again, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: He said it was not answered.

Mr. Innes: Out of $89,000, you break down $9,000; there is $80,000 still not broken down. I mean, in all fairness, is that the way the hon. Minister wants to operate?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I submit, sir, it was not dealt with as asked by my hon. colleague. I asked the question with respect to two fees which were stated—there is an amount of some $80,000, and I think my hon. colleague has asked for the breakdown of that $80,000.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, this is the same subject matter. I read this out and whether the hon. member for Oxford was here or not is not my responsibility. I will repeat it for him.

I said what we were asking in 1962 with respect to legal fees for the fund and payment of medical examinations and credit reports, and it came up to some $90,000. Now the items to which I think the hon. member is referring are made up of solicitors' fees—$55,500; Crown attorneys and lawyers used for prosecutions under The Highway Traffic Act—$11,500; medical examinations $7,600; credit reports $4,800; settlement committee $3,000, and miscellaneous $7,700, for a grand total of $89,800.

Vote 2004 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed: Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, it is too bad that you kept us so long because if we had got finished at 10:00 o'clock I was going to invite all the hon. members of the House out to a late supper.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we have the Budget debate, the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary, which were not completed earlier this week, and anything on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:30 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 1962

The House met at 10:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome as visitors to the Legislature this morning, as our guests, students from the following schools: in the east gallery, C. H. Burner and A. P. Wheeler Public Schools, Scarborough, and in the west gallery, Birchcliffe Public School, Scarborough.

I beg to inform the House that the clerk has received from the commissioners of estate bills, their report of the following case: Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting Hamilton Civic Hospitals:

THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE MACKEY,

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE McLENNAN

Osgoode Hall, Toronto 1
March, 6, 1962

RODERICK LEWIS, ESQ., QC,
CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Sir:

Re Private Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting Hamilton Civic Hospitals

The undersigned, as commissioners of estate bills as provided by The Legislative Assembly Act, RSO 1960, Chap. 208, section 57, having had the said bill referred to us as such commissioners, now beg to report thereon.

Pursuant to an Act relating to the City Hospital of Hamilton, Statutes of Ontario 1898, Chap. 43, the City of Hamilton has heretofore owned and operated three hospitals in the city of Hamilton.

The purpose of the present bill is to vest in a corporate body to be known as "the Board of Governors of the Hamilton Civic Hospitals", the general management, operation and maintenance of all hospitals now owned or hereafter acquired by the corporation of the city of Hamilton.

We note that in the bill as presently framed, that while the ownership of the hospitals is to remain vested in the corporation of the city of Hamilton and that by section 18 of the proposed bill they are obligated to provide the board with working capital and to pay operating deficits, that section 24 provides that the board and not the city shall be liable for all claims, accounts and demands arising from or relating to the management, operation or maintenance of the hospitals.

It is our view that because under the Act, the city and not the board are the owners of the hospitals, that the bill should specifically provide that the city should be liable for payment of any judgment obtained against the board and for the payment of the amount of any settlement made in respect of claims against the board.

To accomplish this purpose we recommend that section 18 (1) of the proposed bill be amended by adding thereto the following:

In determining whether or not an operating deficit has been incurred by the board within the meaning of this subsection the amount of the settlement of any claim, account or demand made upon the board and the amount of any final judgment obtained against the board, to the extent that such settlement or judgment is not recoverable from an insurer of the board, shall be paid by the board and charged against the operating revenues of the board.

so that the section shall read:

18. (1) The city shall, in each year, levy on the whole of the assessment for property and business assessment, according to the last revised assessment roll, a sum sufficient to provide for the operating deficit, if any, incurred by the board during the preceding fiscal year according to the financial statement reported upon by the auditors of the city and shall pay over to the board the amount of any such operating deficit on or before the first day of May of the same year. In determining whether or not an operating deficit has been incurred by the board within the meaning of this subsection the amount of the settlement of any claim, account or demand made upon the board and the amount of any final judgment obtained against the board, to the extent that such settlement or judgment is not recoverable from an insurer of the board, shall be paid by the board and charged against the operating revenues of the board.

We are of the opinion that the provisions of the said bill as amended, are proper for carrying its purpose into effect and that it is reasonable that such bill should be passed into law.

We have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servants.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George), from the standing committee on legal bills, presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment.

Bill No. 61, An Act to amend The County Courts Act.

Bill No. 62, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Bill No. 64, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Bill No. 65, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Bill No. 66, An Act to amend The Juvenile and Family Courts Act.

Bill No. 67, An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. 63, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a point of information I would like to raise and direct in the first instance to yourself; perhaps you would like to direct it to others subsequently. About one year ago, a bust of the late Agnes Macphail was presented and there was a ceremony in this House, which most of the hon. members I think will recall. At that time the hon. Prime Minister of the day (Mr. Frost), stated:

The bust will be displayed here in the Parliament buildings where it will take its place with other leaders of our land, leaders in the past, as a tribute to Miss Macphail and to remind us of the extraordinary contribution she made to the progress and well being of this country over a period of many years.

My question is: Where is that bust now?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): To whom is the hon. member addressing the question?

Mr. MacDonald: I am addressing it to the Speaker of the House and he can pass it on to whomever is the appropriate person, because I am curious to know where it is, having been assured by the hon. Prime Minister it would get an honoured place. It has since disappeared.

Mr. Speaker: I will make inquiries and have the information next week.

Orders of the day.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND MINISTER OF CITIZENSHIP

On vote 1601:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I do not know if this comes under the vote; it is in connection with the research of the citizenship department. Can I go ahead? I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister could perhaps clarify a little bit more for us what these research projects will be for which he is asking extra funds? When he was bringing in the estimates in the House before, I think, to summarize it, he was saying that this was in order to research the priority of needs of newcomers. I felt that was perhaps a somewhat vague interpretation of what the research was going to be. Further on he said it would be to establish what is the fall-out in language classes, and I would appreciate knowing what the projects are.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I have not got the complete memoranda with me, Mr. Chairman. I did outline to the House that the department, in the fulfilment of one of its assignments in co-operating with organizations, that one of the chief ones, will be a project of which I gave some detail. I had thought the hon. member had been paying attention to it, but I mentioned the special project of the International Institute and this is a co-operative research project.

The co-operating agencies are the Laidlaw Foundation, the MacNamara Foundation, the Federal Citizenship Branch and our own department. They will assist in the operation of a special branch at the International Institute, whose job will be to study the welfare needs of the newcomers, to acquaint them with the services of all community agencies, especially those financed by the United Appeal and if necessary to recommend such changes in the pattern of services as may seem necessary in order to draw these newcomers more fully into the total life of Metropolitan Toronto.

The projects will be more or less followed up in this manner: There will be some $2,500 available to the International Institute welfare project; $1,500 to the study of assistance in vocational guidance; $1,000 for the television language research; $1,000 in respect of the Ontario Welfare Council, and the balance for any special projects that may come along in the course of the year.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The other question I have asked before is about the fall-out students in these language classes. The hon. Minister had mentioned that he did not keep the figures of the attendance of newcomers to language classes. I wonder, sir, since that time has the hon. Minister thought of doing some research on this; is this something he wanted to check into further? Could I also ask if there is not an arrangement with the various school boards that, if a class for teaching English falls below a certain attendance they do not get a grant from the hon. Minister? In that way he would know the number of fall-outs.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: As I intimated last time, I do not think that we keep that type of statistics. I do know that last year there were over 2,000 certificates for those who had completed their courses, but I will check to see if we do keep a statistical survey of how long the people attend.

My own position is this, as I outlined to the House the other day, that our chief purpose is attracting the students to the classes. We are spending a fair amount of time and a fair amount of effort and, I think, a fair amount of money to let these people know of the classes. The department and I personally stress over and over again, through every media that is available, the necessity and the value of the English classes. We do our best to make the classes as attractive as possible but, as I say, a great many things come about after a person has entered the class. The student may obtain a job on another shift; maybe family circumstances change; we are up against the same thing that confronts any adult educational programme.

The classes are kept until they drop to a minimum of six persons, which we believe is really a very reasonable figure.

Mr. Thompson: In connection with the number of ethnic language papers that the hon. Minister receives in his office, I would presume that he does have some kind of an interpreter service when he is receiving these in the very few languages that he himself does not read. I am, therefore, interested in knowing, does he interpret these language papers and, if he does, for what purpose?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The papers are read by me for exactly the same reasons that any newspaper is read by any individual, as a source of information. It has been my experience, having read these newspapers, some of them all of my life, that there are matters of information about activities within the communities, an expression of opinion by the editors, news reports of matters that take place which are not covered by the press of our province—the dailies, and weeklies. In some cases the matter will be covered to a greater extent.

We do within the department translate, as a matter of course, any of these newspapers. We are fortunate that within the department, and outside of the department within the government services, there are now people who can understand almost any language that is spoken or written in Canada. This is a tremendous change which has taken place in recent years within the government services.

Subject to the time available for the staff, which is a comparatively small staff and has a tremendous job on its hands, the staff, if they have time available, just very cursorily glance through those newspapers in the language with which they are familiar. If there is any matter which they believe should be brought to the attention of the Minister, they do so. It does not happen too often, but it has happened on occasion.

In turn, I read some 12 newspapers more thoroughly when time permits me. They are brought in and once a week I set aside an hour and glance through anywhere up to 100 pages of this material. If I can understand every word of an article, I let it go at that. However, there may be a special article in which I want to be more intimately informed than I am enabled by my own translation and then I can request the relevant person within the department to make a translation for me so that I become familiar with it.

We do not have the type of translations that the hon. member will be familiar with, that has been available in Ottawa for a great number of years where, I believe, the newspapers are translated in total for the use of the various departments. We do not have such facilities, and indeed, perhaps at the present time there is no such need.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate the answer. I notice that the hon. Minister reads 12 newspapers but he gets 40 newspapers in different languages. I would not imagine he could read a newspaper in Byelorussian; perhaps he can, I apologize. Take another language, such as Croatian.

These are paid for by the department I presume? As I understand he reads these personally and if he wants something of interest he will ask one of his staff to translate it. Is it possible for anyone other than the hon. Minister himself, and I am thinking of someone such as myself, if I saw something in which I might be interested in one of these newspapers, can I use the interpreter services of the hon. Minister's department?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, many of the newspapers which we receive are sent to us free. I will tell the hon. member, when I was a private member of this House I subscribed for and paid out of my own pocket for about 15 newspapers every week. Not only the ethnic languages, I also followed the practice of subscribing to the Guelph Mercury, the Oshawa Times, the Milton Champion, the Sudbury Daily Star, the Atikokan newspaper—I subscribed to those personally in order that I might as a member be more familiar with all parts of the province and not just to have the viewpoint of the Toronto dailies. I feel that the ethnic newspapers have a contribution in that role too.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry to belabour this. I see the distinction in what the hon. Minister would do as a private member, and I myself also subscribe as a private member to papers; there is the distinction in that role and in being a Minister of the Crown, when one can get translations of these papers.

I am interested in just clarifying, I think the hon. Minister has actually clarified for me, the point that he have translations by civil servants. As the hon. Minister has said: he has translations about items in which he is interested. I think the translations might be available to more than himself, if it is only on the basis of personal interest that he has these translations.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I may say that I have only had the necessity to request two articles to be translated in the last three months. I think we do not have the staff and do not have the funds for that type of thing. It is fortunate that I am able, as I say, to read most of the newspapers that come to us.

Mr. Thompson: My last question is in connection with the need for two liaison officers, two extra liaison officers. I notice that the hon. Minister's explanation for this estimate was that these two liaison officers would do an extensive amount of travelling for the department. I wonder if the hon. Minister would clarify just what will be the purpose of their travelling. What will they be doing?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The department is presently able, because of its location, to carry out its responsibilities only within the metropolitan area of Toronto and vicinities easily accessible. We feel that the work of the department should be extended throughout the province. Prior to the community programme branch section coming to the department, the community programme branch had representatives throughout all of the province and the individual officers of that department scattered throughout the province were able to devote a certain percentage of their time, 10 or 15 per cent, to making all the necessary contacts with the principals of schools in relationship to our teaching of English classes, and were able to keep in contact at times with the local community groups. But since the transfer that will be coming to an end. Those field officers have still been carrying on at our request in that way, until I believe May 1 and then it will end.

We feel there is a great need for this, to have a number of field officers. We have treasury board approval in the estimates for two such officers. One would service about 11 counties, roughly in a line between here and Georgian Bay, and the other would service some 10 or 11 counties east of that line. There would still be a very large area in the eastern part of Ontario and the northern part of Ontario with which we will not have as direct contact as we would like, but as our programme is extended throughout the province I would imagine that I would be returning to this House for further requests in that line.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he feels that the community programme branch, which has a number of officers across this province and which has been carrying out this work, has not been doing it satisfactorily because of the onus of work over the past year, and is this why he has to duplicate this particular area by having the liaison officers?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There is no duplication of any kind. The Department of Citizenship has expanded its programme along the lines as outlined by myself and in some ways following out some of the suggestions of the hon. member. Indeed, if we were to carry out the functions of all levels of government which the hon. member spoke about, both municipal and federal, we would have to have a staff at least five times as large as we have now. We feel that the work which the department is doing is having a salutary effect within the metropolitan area and the benefits of that programme should be extended through other parts of Ontario and that will be done. The community programme branch has its own field of activity which I think it will carry out in as admirable a way as it has in the past. We have taken over certain duties. We are expanding the work of the department above and beyond what was done in the community programme branch. As a matter of fact, I will recall to the hon. members of the House, Mr. Chairman, that by reason of the transfer of the comparatively small staff and the fusion of that staff with the section of the department, it is my personal belief that the work of citizenship in this province made a tremendous stride forward. With the same number of staff from an administrative point of view we were able to tackle more and accomplish far more than they were in separate units.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, could I ask a question? I understood the community programme officers had been emphasizing the citizenship role on a broader basis than just with new people who have arrived. They have been doing this through a number of voluntary organizations for a great number of years and they have quite a proud record in it. The hon. Minister has said that he does not want to refer to immigration; he was talking of citizenship. But in all of the programme I hear nothing of the native-born Canadian, of the young person who is arriving at the age of 21 who was born in this country. I do not see anything except an emphasis on new people who have come to Canada with respect to citizenship. Is it his approach to broaden out into giving an emphasis on citizenship in other than just with immigrant groups, and if so what would he do?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, citizenship is citizenship regardless of who the individual is, and it is our task to bring the principles of citizenship to as broad a field as possible. Our primary consideration at the present time naturally falls with those who are newcomers to Canada, but our approach to that is only based on the fact that the department has, within its staff, men and women who are especially trained to deal with the matter of citizenship in relationship to newcomers. But the principles of citizenship remain the same.

Now, the community programme branch deals with such things as leadership training, community recreation and co-operation with community groups in general. Its function in relationship to newcomers is dealing with these people as residents of a community who can participate in leadership training and the recreational programme. Ours for the moment is a little more specialized.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would advise me of the latest report which has been issued of the Liquor Control Board. What is the latest report that has been tabled?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The Liquor Control Board does not fall within the special jurisdiction of the Provincial Secretary. If there was one tabled the most recent one would be noted in the votes and proceedings of the House.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, would not the Liquor Control Board report be tabled through the hon. Provincial Secretary?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The report was tabled by the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) for the period March 31, 1961, and it was tabled by him last fall.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I received neither the 1960 nor the 1961 report, and I wondered if it had become the policy not to distribute them to the hon. members? But, in any event, I should like to ask a question in this matter, and if this is not the proper place to discuss it, I wonder if you would tell me, Mr. Chairman, where I might raise the question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the hon. member's question is.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I wonder if the hon. Minister would let me ask the question and then advise me.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am pointing out to the hon. member that the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman), the chief commissioner, tabled the report ending March 31, 1961, in the House last fall. It is available to the hon. member. So far as my recollection is concerned the hon. member will be receiving the report in due course when it is printed the same as has been done in the past. But, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter which does not fall within the purview of these estimates.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, you will recall that earlier in the session the hon. Prime Minister advised us that we would have the opportunity to discuss the operation of the various departments of the government under the estimates. I was of the opinion that since the hon. Provincial Secretary tabled reports or has in the past this has been the department in which we would discuss the matter of liquor policy, that this would be the opportunity for the Opposition to discuss this matter. Now if this is not the right place, I wonder if someone would tell me where I might discuss the matter?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member has any questions of any board or commissions, we have a committee on government commissions at which we would have present the chairman of the Liquor Control Board, and this is the place and this is the form that is used to go into the functions of these various boards. They all appear there, the Racing Commission, and the Water Resources Commission, Hydro and so on. That would be the proper place for the hon. member to ask any question he may want to raise about the functioning of the commission.

Now, the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) is chairman of the Liquor Control Board and if the hon. member has any questions that he wants to address to him, I suppose it could be done. He could either put them on the order paper or ask him before the orders of the day, but certainly it does not come within the estimates of this department because the hon. Provincial Secretary, of course, has a report of every department of government, in his function as Provincial Secretary.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, now that we are into this question, I would submit to you that I cannot agree with what the hon. Prime Minister has just said. It is true, of course, that we can talk about Hydro, we can talk about the other commissions in this particular committee called the committee on commissions. But there must be, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you, an opportunity at some time in this Legislative Assembly to discuss all questions relating to all aspects of provincial government; and in particular revenues and expenditures of certain facets of the government.

Now, surely, there must be afforded the hon. members of this Legislature the opportunity to debate this very important question of liquor at some time during the legislative session. I am not of the mind that it necessarily has to be done under this estimate, maybe there is another estimate, but what the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) is asking for is to be advised when this particular matter can be debated.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I can only say that the procedure and rules of the House provide two places where we may touch on any subject we want. One is the Throne debate and the other is the budget debate. Now what the hon. member is looking for, I assume, is an opportunity to cross-examine somebody about the functions of the Liquor Control Board. I suggest the place to do this is in the committee on government commissions. This is traditional; it has been done on every other committee or commission of government.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that under the purview of the two debates, namely budget and Throne, hon. members are permitted to talk about anything under the sun, that is an ancient parliamentary rule. But there is another basic rule of the House and that is that the hon. members of the Legislature are permitted to examine into and question the fiscal operation of all departments of the government and all the subdivisions of the various departments. Now certainly one of the subdivisions of some department of government must be the Liquor Control Board and I submit—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No!

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister shakes his head and says no. If that be the case, then I think it is time that we determine right now that an opportunity should be afforded. Just because he feels that the discussion is not proper here or under another estimate does not invalidate my argument at all. It is my recollection, Mr. Chairman, that in years gone by, we have always debated this particular question of liquor under the hon. Provincial Secretary's estimates.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No!

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, we certainly have been permitted to comment on it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Not in detail, Mr. Chairman. The hon. members who were at the committee on government commissions were always privileged to, and always did, go into all the details—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, exactly what is the hon. Minister afraid of? Certainly we have been before the committee. We have been before the committee on many things. But I want instructions as to when we can debate this matter in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I will speak to this for a moment. There is no desire on my part to limit the debate about liquor or any other matter. I quite frankly do not see just where this thing can be debated in this House, other than in the two debates I have mentioned. This is where I think it should be debated. However, I will be happy to check into the rules of the House and see what can be done about it. At the moment, I just do not see a solution to the problem but I am quite prepared to look into it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I just want to pursue this to a conclusion, Mr. Chairman. I am prepared to accept the hon. Prime Minister's suggestion, provided he give this House the assurance that if the rules do permit we will not be precluded from reopening these very estimates. In other words, I do not want the suggestion to be made a week hence that the proper place—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I certainly would never give an undertaking that the Opposition can reopen these estimates, because there is no item in these estimates that deals with the Liquor Control Board. All I am saying is I will attempt to make some sort of an arrangement whereby these matters can be debated, that is all.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that one of the difficulties in this matter is the fact that the committee on government commissions, and also the committee on public accounts, hardly ever meet. According to my recollection—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is quite false.

Mr. Bryden: We started this session of the Legislature in November, Mr. Chairman, we are now into March. There was a recess, of course, but we are now into March, and certainly the committee on public accounts had at most one meeting, and the committee on government commissions, nine. Both of those committees, Mr. Chairman, are committees where the Liquor Control Board could be discussed.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon.

member has mentioned the committee on government commissions. I happen to be chairman of this committee and no one has asked me to arrange a meeting. As chairman, I have made arrangements for the committee to meet on March 21—these arrangements being made some time ago.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would remind you, sir, that during the first session of this Legislature, an entire afternoon and part of an evening was given over under these estimates to discuss the matter of the liquor control policy of this province. I would remind you, sir, that under that session we ranged the complete field, we had the opportunity to discuss the policy of advertising as it applies in this province and I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Chairman: Order! The hon. member heard when he could discuss this.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, do I not have the opportunity to put my suggestion to you? Certainly I should be able to make my point. I will abide by your ruling, sir, but I suggest that it is not proper to not allow me to continue to make this point. I suggest to you, and through you to the hon. Prime Minister, sir, that there is a precedent that has been established in this House. It was permitted for a full day during the first sitting of the Legislature and I think that it is out of order—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): I bet the hon. member is on his feet more than I am.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am getting tired of the interruptions from the hon. Minister of Mines, Mr. Chairman. I do not interrupt him while he is speaking—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I never get a chance to speak.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I leave it at that and I suggest that the hon. Prime Minister reconsider this. I wonder if he would reconsider it in view of the precedent that has already been established in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can throw some light on this. The hon. member is quite right. Actually the chairman of the Liquor Control Board in this House at every session presents a speech on the operations of his board, either during the Throne debate or during the budget debate. I am at this time preparing such an address for the budget debate. At that time I am sure any questions they have in mind they can ask and they will get their answers.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have given the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) my assurance that I will make some arrangements for this to be debated. I can only point out to hon. members that since the House last met we have an hon. Minister of the Crown who is chairman of the Liquor Control Board (Mr. Grossman). In other words hon. members cannot compare the situation this year with the situation last year.

If they go back into history, if they go back to the time when I first came into this House, the chairman of the Liquor Control Board was always a Minister without Portfolio and answered in the House. I do not know this morning, when asked in the middle of these estimates, exactly how or in what form he spoke or how it was set up. I am quite prepared to find out. The liquor question in my opinion should be debated here just as freely as we debate matters of highway safety, welfare or anything else. There will be a complete, frank, full discussion. Now I cannot make it any clearer than that.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has indicated that he is willing to look into this, but may I just draw to his attention another variant on this same problem that we have argued with for years and I think we came up with a solution. At least I hope we have a solution. For years the Opposition complained that on Hydro there was a report made as part of the Throne speech, but there was no opportunity to discuss the detail across the floor of the House in the fashion we feel is necessary, and I think a significant body of public opinion feels is necessary.

The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) a year or so ago indicated that he was willing to consider Hydro as part of his estimates and we have since had a full discussion of it. My feeling is that this resolved the problem.

I am supporting the plea of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and others because I think this is exactly what we are seeking here. Each of these bodies, the liquor commission and Hydro, have budgets that are far bigger than the majority of departments and therefore I think it is a legitimate proposition that we should have full scope across the floor of the House for the kind of questioning that we normally have on estimates. This, I understand, is what the hon. leader of the Opposition is pleading for and I support his plea.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1601, most of the attention of the House so far in the discussion of this very important estimate has been directed to the citizenship function of the department. That is as it should be; it is a very important function of the department. However, the department does have other functions as well, which I think should be considered.

There is one in which I am particularly interested and that is the administration of The Companies Act.

In last year's session I expressed my views on that Act. I will not repeat what I said at that time, except to call attention to what I consider to be a very unsatisfactory situation. The Companies Act of this province can readily be used by a person who wishes to shield his activities or to escape from his responsibilities.

As we know, anybody who really is just carrying on a private business can become incorporated and thereby enjoy the advantages which are quite substantial of incorporation by getting, I think it was Mayor Whitton of Ottawa who said, any two of his sisters, or his cousins or his aunts, to associate with him as shareholders. He can then become incorporated with three people—two of them just being his own nominees and mere extensions of himself as far as the business is concerned—he has what amounts to a private business, but he enjoys the limited liability that The Companies Act provides.

On the previous occasion—a few days ago when we were discussing citizenship—there was considerable attention drawn to the problem, and I think it is quite a serious problem, of new Canadians being invited to come to this country and then in some instances being subjected to most vicious exploitation when they get here, particularly in their role as employees. I do not need to go all through that, we are all familiar with the blow-up that happened in Toronto last year and the very serious exploitation which gave rise to it.

I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that The Companies Act and the way in which it is phrased and is administered, is a contributing factor to the problems in which some of these new Canadians found themselves. Some of the people who were exploiting them most viciously were people who were sheltering under the protection of The Companies Act of this province.

In other words, they set up what was really a dummy corporation. It was just a private business, but they were in the position where their liabilities were limited; they risked little, if any, of their own money. They saw an opportunity where they hoped they might make a quick profit with very little investment of their own by getting into the sub-contracting field in the building industry. They found in many cases that their little scheme did not work out quite as well as they had thought so they went into bankruptcy.

I am not expert on the laws of bankruptcy, but from what I have seen of the results I think they need some tightening up. However, that is not the function of this Legislature, it is the function of the Parliament of Canada.

These men hired workmen, usually immigrants, who were not too familiar with our ways, customs or laws. The men accepted employment in good faith expecting that they would be paid for their labour as they were entitled to be. But then the employer through his dummy company went into bankruptcy and the worker would collect perhaps a few cents on the dollar on the wages and other benefits owing to him. Within a relatively short period of time, within a few months, the person who really had cheated them—I admit he had not legally cheated them but there it was—he was out from under the bankruptcy and he could set up in another company. It is the easiest thing in the world, I would judge, to be incorporated as a company in this province and I suppose in any province. He could just set up in a new company free of all his obligations, having cheated the workmen out of their wages, and start all over again.

I may say that this difficulty arises not only in relation to the exploitation of labour, particularly of immigrant labour. I think it is a factor in the very difficult and perplexing situation we have in many of our municipalities at the present time where some people are driving trucks through municipal by-laws. In fact, I think it was stated by the investigating commission in the town of Mimico that the developers had pretty well taken over the running of the building department in Mimico.

Again the provisions of The Companies Act permit irresponsibility. A person can get into the position where he can escape his just obligations and if he is caught in one instance he wiggles out and sets up under a new name, he becomes a new personality and starts all over again.

I submitted to the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) last year that this sort of problem should be looked into. I do not imagine that my suggestion was given any consideration at all, but that does not mean that it is not a serious problem. When I raised the matter last year the answer of the hon. Provincial Secretary was that under the law any company or any person—and it really is an individual in most cases of company incorporations in Ontario—anyone who incorporates, and therefore enjoys the provisions of The Companies Act with regard to limited liability, must include in the name of his company the word “limited”. This is a warning to any person dealing with him or dealing with his so-called company that he enjoys limited liability.

Now this, I imagine, is a very grave warning to workmen who may not even be able to speak our language and certainly know nothing about our laws. It is certainly no warning to them that they should be careful in dealing with the fellow, and should make sure that they get their wages cash on the barrelhead. Unfortunately a great many of them did not get their wages at all. I think it is regrettable that laws of the province in one phase should assist those who wish to evade at least the spirit of the law in other areas, and who wish to evade just obligations.

I think that it is very unfortunate in the specific matter of the regulation of the construction industry. I have already suggested in this House and others have—in fact, there is a resolution on the order paper to this effect standing in the name of my hon. leader (Mr. MacDonald)—that there should be provision for licensing of all contractors and subcontractors in the field. I think that is necessary, and I think it is also necessary to take a hard look at The Companies Act and at these provisions which allow three people to get together to incorporate a company.

I do not think there is any sense to that provision at all. Three people getting together to incorporate a company should be able to carry on, if they are genuinely three independent parties which is rarely the case, under some other arrangement. The privileges of legislation like The Companies Act should be made available only to substantially larger aggregations of individuals who wish to engage in some sort of joint enterprise.

I would venture to suggest that if an analysis were made of the records of The Provincial Secretary's Department it would be found that a majority—and probably the overwhelming majority—of companies that have been incorporated with three shareholders consisted of what were really just private businesses or partnerships. Either one or two of the three shareholders were not true shareholders at all; they were simply nominees, somebody's secretary or somebody's mother or wife. I think when the law is being abused in that way we should take a look at it.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Are we still on vote 1601? I was quite interested the other night when the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) was last speaking on this estimate. He was leaving the impression of being critical of the waste of the taxpayers' money and he tied in with this an innuendo that perhaps there was too much being spent on the statutory vote 1601 in relation to Ministers without Portfolio. I do not know whether I am in order on this particular vote or not, but my question relates to the salary of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

My impression is that that is a statutory vote. My question to the hon. Minister is in three parts. First, why is not the salary of the hon. leader of the Opposition shown as a statutory vote on the main office vote? Secondly, what is the total amount that the hon. leader of the Opposition receives in regard to salary and expenses? Thirdly, in the accounts for last year there is a name B. Upper; the amount is $6,999.96. What services does Mr. B. Upper provide to the government of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, before I come to the hon. member's question, I should like to make a remark or two about the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden).

Mr. Chairman, the province of Ontario can be well proud of its Corporations Act. The Corporations Act of Ontario is being followed as the model Act for all provinces of Canada, which will be considering the adoption of a uniform Companies Act modelled after our Act. The basic reason, the basic idea behind the limited company was established well over 100 years ago—and, I may say in England—and really formed the very basis for the economic expansion of Britain and then to the Commonwealth common law countries.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member say that the privileges of limited liability should only be extended to large corporations.

Mr. Bryden: I did not say large corporations, I said larger groups of individuals.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Larger groups of individuals. Well, Mr. Chairman, for the knowledge of the hon. member, almost 80 per cent of some 60,000 or more companies operating in Ontario are the small individuals, the small shopkeepers, the small operations, up and down the length and breadth of this province, who—I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman—are as much entitled to the advantages of the concepts of limited liability as any of the large business corporations of this province.

I invite the hon. member to go to our public search offices and get out the names of all of these private companies and then visit for himself the fine—and there are tens of thousands—business operations being carried on in this province with the advantages of limited liability.

I would bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Chairman, that there are certain jurisdictions, Michigan for example—and I believe in the old country now they are considering the adoption of the one-man corporation where you will not need three individuals to form a corporation, but one person can incorporate himself or create the entity, the concept of a corporate personality with the advantages of such a legal person.

No one decries more than I do the fact that certain individuals might shirk their responsibilities in carrying out their obligations to their workmen or to their suppliers in instances that have occurred in recent years. The provisions of The Bankruptcy Act are a federal responsibility and it is my understanding that the Canadian Bar Association is making representations and the matter will receive its review to curb any abuse of the provisions of The Bankruptcy Act, which also were devised in many cases to assist the small individual who, through no act of his own or no wish of his own, has fallen into bad circumstances.

I do bring to the attention of the hon. member, provisions of section 73 of The Corporations Act of the province of Ontario. It reads as follows:

The directors of a company are jointly and severally liable to the clerks, labourers, servants, apprentices and other wage earners thereof for all debts due while they are directors for services performed for the company not exceeding six months' wages and for the vacation with pay included for not more than 12 months under The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act and the regulations made thereunder, or under any collective agreement made by the company.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question of the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) in relation to the two votes, 1602 and 1606: Mr. Boyd Upper is employed as executive assistant, I believe, to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). His salary, which is designated by the hon. leader of the Opposition, presently stands at $9,000, but the hon. leader of the Opposition is in a better position than I to outline in detail, if he so desires, the duties on an all-year-round basis of Mr. Upper.

In relationship to the honorarium paid to the hon. leader of the Opposition—the total amount to which he is entitled, as a member of this House—the provisions are $5,000 and $2,000, and then by virtue of his office to $12,000 and $2,000, making a total of $21,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on the observations of the hon. Minister and the comment of the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Lawrence: I was not making a comment, I was asking a question.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Chairman, can we have the answer from the hon. leader of the Opposition?

Mr. MacDonald: May I speak without interference? Is the hon. member for York-Humber chairman of the committee here?

Mr. Lewis: I believe I have the same privileges as the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: And I have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into the argument at the moment; that has become a theme with the Opposition group, with regard to the effectiveness of the contribution of the hon. Ministers without Portfolio in the government. But what I am very disturbed about is, that if there was an innuendo in their comment, then there is also obvious innuendo in the question that the hon. member for St. George (Mr.

Lawrence) has raised—because it is in the nature, in my view, of a cheap counter-attack which he himself, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I assume that I will be given an opportunity to reply to this attack, will I?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, since I was mentioned, I would like the same opportunity.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the point of the whole question and the innuendo involved in it is to throw doubts on the wisdom and the validity of the amount of money that is now being provided to the Opposition ranks. Clearly there can be no other purpose when you are queried as to the amount of money that was voted.

Now, on this general proposition, Mr. Chairman, I want to say something. I do not happen to be in the position at the moment of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), but I want to say that it was a scandal that this province did not, until two years ago, place a person whose position historically in any legislature is as important as the hon. leader of the Opposition, at least in the category of the back bench member of the Cabinet. And that is all that happened a year or two ago, because I submit, Mr. Chairman, and anybody—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We did it, though.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine, you did it, but you did it only after years and years of pressure and the whole implication of the question asked by the hon. member for St. George is to undermine this move. I give this government credit for moving in the right direction, but I am disturbed by a younger member who normally takes a more enlightened and progressive approach to this—Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member wants to answer, I think he will have an opportunity to deal with it later.

This government has moved in the direction, I think, of meeting the situation in a better fashion than has been done in the past. But I think they have taken only a step in that direction. I reiterate that I think the hon. leader of the Opposition is not only as important in the history of parliamentary government, the hon. leader of the Opposition is infinitely more important than two-thirds of the members of the Cabinet. Because, with out an effective Opposition, you do not have parliament in the British tradition.

An hon. member: Why does the hon. member not move over?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not moving over with them. I am defending a principle and I sometimes wonder whether the people opposite could recognize a principle if they met it walking down the street in broad daylight. Now, I would just like to go one step further, Mr. Chairman, not to provoke or disturb or irritate this government beyond pleading that they move further in the direction that they are going. It is always thrown back at us that we in the Opposition have the right to use all of the government departments and their research staff and so on and I do not for one moment want to be unduly critical of the fact that they do not co-operate with us, because normally they do, but it is the nature of the situation that the government and hon. Cabinet Ministers and even government members have a better opportunity to use the whole machinery of government for their purposes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine, Mr. Chairman. Somebody interjected and said "This is what the people wanted; they elected the government." Fine. But the people also elected an Opposition and at the present time, perhaps it would be salutary for government members to remind themselves that the votes represented by the Opposition at the moment are more than the votes that they represent. And, therefore, as a claim on the public purse—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I challenge that.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope), as usual, would be in error. Well, Mr. Chairman, as a claim on the public purse, if the public business is going to be fulfilled, I think that not only the present amount of money should be spent for the Opposition groups—both the official Opposition and the group that I happen to be leader of at the present time—but a larger amount of money should be made available. Any government—if you will face it, in your heart of hearts—will acknowledge it is going to be only as good as its Opposition. It is going to be saved from a lot of its follies by an effective Opposition which reveals those follies before they generate into something more than just a folly. We have had too many experiences and documentations of that kind of development in the last five or six years.

The reason I rise is not to defend the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer)—he can defend himself, and he can defend the salary that goes to Dr. Boyd Upper—but I am rising to defend a principle and I am shocked and surprised that the particular hon. member who got up should, with the innuendo in his question, start to undermine what I would like to believe he himself supported—the idea of giving more resources to the Opposition so that they can fulfil their job.

So if we are going to debate this, and I think we should debate it, I hope we will debate it on the level of recognizing what parliament and legislatures need if they are going to be able to do an effective job.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the attack by the hon. member for York South on me.

Mr. MacDonald: It was not an attack.

Mr. Lawrence: It was not an attack? What was it? He mentioned the word—

Mr. MacDonald: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I am getting a little weary—and I think the public is getting a little weary—of differences of opinion that are immediately construed as personal attacks. I have gotten up and disagreed with the views of the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence). Now let him get up and disagree with my views, but do not let him say that I am attacking him personally.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to disagree with the views just expressed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), and if he would keep quiet for a minute he would learn that. But I just used the words "cheap attack on me." I used those words because I wrote them down as he mentioned them a few moments ago in referring to me. I deprecate that type of language in this House. I deprecate it very much, and I have said so publicly in the past, and I would like to say it to the hon. member who uses those terms in relation to me, right now.

Now, let us take it back in chronological order. Perhaps the hon. member was not here the other night when the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) first brought this matter up, but there was certainly a slur, an innuendo, left at that time by the hon. member, and I hope I am being fair to him. He stated at that time, or left the impression at that time, that this government was wasting the taxpayers' money because of the statutory amount shown in this vote that we are now supposed to be discussing.

My point in rising was twofold. First of all to bring to the attention of the public that there is no statutory amount shown in this vote for the salary and expenses, which are more than for any hon. Minister without Portfolio and which is paid to the hon. leader of the Opposition. That was my first attempt and I think, thanks to the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), the public's attention has now been directed to that. It is something that is not mentioned very often in this House and I think it should be, because I think it is a good thing and I agree with it. But I am also getting a little bit tired, with this small group over there especially, and this slightly larger group there, continually yelling and yelping and bellyaching about the services or the lack of services provided to them for research work in this House.

I agree that services should be provided. I agree with that, but I think it ill behooves the hon. leader of that party, that small party there, that minority group there, and that hon. leader who is, after all, a backbencher and has no more rights than I have in this House, to stand up and use the words and the language and the tone and the innuendo he has now used, especially in relation to me. I agree that there is a role in this House, and in every parliament, for the Opposition. My own doubt is that perhaps in this House the Opposition is not playing that role the way they should be, but that is a matter of opinion.

My second point in bringing this up at this time is to point out that there are far more services provided to the hon. members in the Opposition by the government and thus the taxpayer, by this government, not by any previous Liberal government but by this government, these people. These services are not provided to the backbenchers on the government side and they should be.

Now when the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) continually complains—may I point out that the people sitting behind him have far greater services provided by the taxpayer than we do on this side.

Mr. Bryden: What services do we have provided?

Mr. Lawrence: They have far more stenographic services, they have far more facilities for interviewing clients and having research done for them—

Mr. Bryden: No facilities for research, we do our own!

Mr. Lawrence: And they are a minority group, a very small minority group and for any hon. member on the Liberal side to stand up and make criticisms of the paltry amount paid to the hon. Ministers without Portfolio just irks me no end. It irks me no end, because on that side at least they have a research assistant. We do not. There are no services and facilities provided for the backbencher on the government side.

My plea is I agree with what they have. Perhaps they should have even more. But do not criticize us, for heaven's sake, for standing up and attempting to make the same sort of plea that they have been making. Also, I would like to have the hon. member for York South apologize for saying that this was a cheap unwarranted attack.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, may I start off first of all by thanking the hon. member for correcting the inference that he obviously left. Whether or not it was intended I do not wish to comment.

I would like to talk a little bit about this—

Mr. Lawrence: I said it was not intended. Take my word for it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very happy—

Mr. Lawrence: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I did not hear this last brilliant, witty remark. The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) speaks into that microphone all the time without standing up. If he has the guts to stand up and say something, then say it so we can hear it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member: if he says it was not intended I accept his word.

Mr. Lawrence: Thanks too much.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: But I would like to talk a little bit about the principle which has been raised as a result of these comments, and I am going to use some words, and they are calculated words, they are intended, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well chosen, I suppose.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: That will be for the hon. Minister to decide himself. They will not be windy anyway. I do not intend to get imbroiled in temper here, sir. This is a matter which I have complained about since I came to this House, I am going to continue to complain about it until it is corrected.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that in view of the amount of estimates and the budget which has been brought down by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), the amount of money which is available to conduct the office of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) shows nothing more nor less than a contempt for the Opposition on the part of the government of the day. I suggest to you, sir, that the amount of money—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I have the floor and I am going to keep it until I am through. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Could we have a little order!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We are too polite, that is the trouble.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I do intend to be polite, but I intend to be firm. I will repeat that in my opinion the amount of money which is available shows contempt for the Opposition and for the people who sent them here.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Perhaps they deserve it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would further state to you, sir—I was going to use another word and tell hon. members that it was miserly and I think it applies and I think when I am through they will agree with me that it does apply.

The hon. member mentioned the salary which is available to the chief executive assistant of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The amount has been quoted. I think the hon. members of this Legislature should know the total amount of money which is available to the hon. leader of the Opposition to perform the very important function of government, if our way of life is to continue. This is not a laughing matter, I would assure the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope). This is a matter at which I think the public of this province would rebel at if they knew the facts and I intend to put them on the record. I have the permission of the hon. leader of the Opposition to put them on the record. He is permitted out of a billion dollar budget, the total sum of $18,000 to run the office of the leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Plus—$18,000 plus!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Someone has suggested plus nine! I think the hon. members of this House should know that the $9,000 comes out of that $18,000, so I will correct that in print right now.

This is the money which is allotted to the leader of the Opposition to employ the various help that he requires in order to do the research work, in order to carry out the functions for which he is charged and which affect every citizen of Ontario. This amount of $9,000, which is left after paying a chief executive assistant, is the money that is available to employ stenographic help, to purchase the supplies that are necessary in an office and to do all the other activities which are required by the Opposition.

Now I think it is no secret on this side of the House that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), being the type of a man that he is, has personally reached into his own pocket in order to supplement these amounts to carry out the function of government which is charged to him.

This being the case, Mr. Chairman, I submit to this House that the amount of money which is available to the leader of the Opposition shows contempt for the Opposition. Is it any wonder we feel that perhaps the growth of the Cabinet should stop, and a little bit more money be made available to the Opposition? The leader of the Opposition does not have a limousine and a chauffeur to drive him around as do the minor officials in the Cabinet and in the government; he does not have access to these facilities. The suggestion has been made that in my original statement I was misleading the public when I stated that there was a waste of the taxpayers' money. I would say this, that the amount of money which is available to the Opposition is in itself a waste of taxpayers' money because it inhibits the work of that Opposition and prevents them from having the facilities to bring to light the faults of the government as is their traditional responsibility and is the wish of every citizen of this province.

Mr. Chairman, since we are dealing with this whole subject I would state that it is necessary for private members on this side of the House to infringe upon the limited resources available to the leader of the Opposition. If they wish to do any work themselves, if they wish to interview anybody from their constituency, and it is not once it is many times, I have seen this honourable gentleman give up his office in order to make it available for members of this House to conduct the business which is rightfully theirs when they are sent here elected in the first place. And all because they happened to be back-bench members and do not have any facilities whatsoever in which to do that work.

I am pleased that this matter has been raised in this Legislature and it is my hope, my hope, Mr. Chairman, that the press that is here today will report these remarks and let the people of the province find out what really is going on, and then I think the situation will be corrected. I think when that mass of public opinion does come forward—and I am certain that it will come forward—when this matter is brought to their attention the situation will be corrected.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There are several matters which have come to light in this discussion. I was rather hoping that the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) would rise to his feet and defend the position taken by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) by revealing to this House the very liberal treatment that was given to the Opposition the last time this Opposition party had an opportunity to deal with an Opposition. For the benefit of the hon. member for Wentworth—and I listened to him and perhaps he does not need to listen to me but he might keep silent—he might be interested to know that the last time the Liberal Party had control of these matters they gave the leader of the Opposition an additional $1,000 per year, no stenographic help whatsoever, one small office, and a statement by the leader of the party that that would be all the Opposition would ever get as long as he led the party.

This, for some of the newer members in this House who perhaps are not aware of the history of some of these things, I thought might be of interest. Now it is this government under my predecessor, which has broken down this vindictive attitude that was held by the previous Liberal administration. Two years later these services are derided in this House as they have been derided by the hon. member for Wentworth this morning, but I do not think they were derided at the time these were provided for his leader because he was—I think he was—quite happy about them. But two years make a difference. Either that or the hon. member for Wentworth does not know his history.

I would also point out that in this building we are very cramped for space. I could go on and tell you some of the problems of The Department of Education, which is situated in this building, where we have had to double up, take corridors and put in partitions in order to create office space. There is not a doubt in the world that as the government has grown this building has remained the same size and it is the central building. The Legislature is here where the public meet and we are utilizing every square foot. Particulars of this can be discussed in the estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), but I am sure he would be delighted to point out to the hon. members what use is being made of office space.

I rather doubt that the hon. member for Wentworth would care to have an office over in the East Block, or downtown, or over at the corner of College and Bay where we might be able to arrange some additional space, but in this House space is at a premium. In this building the facilities for the hon. members have been improved gradually over the years. The hon. member for Wentworth has been in the House a relatively short time and perhaps he does not know. I mean he has complained on numerous occasions about the facilities available to him. He has no basis of comparison to know what facilities used to be available. I do not know what he expected when he was elected. There are many, many men who have served their constituents well and looked after their ridings with the facilities that are available and without finding it necessary to get up and complain and whine about the facilities every time they spoke in this House.

I am simply saying that we are doing the best with the facilities we have available in the House. I think that at least the Opposition has nothing to complain about if they compare the treatment they are getting with the treatment they handed out the last time they had an opportunity to hand out treatment. I think these things must be borne in mind and we must get this whole picture into its proper perspective.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: And they would do the same thing again.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make some remarks. Of all the hon. members of this House, and I say this very sincerely, the hon. member for Wentworth was the last one who should have got up and made the statement he did because, only last Friday, he made this statement which is on page 739 of Hansard, about the hon. Ministers without Portfolio:

I believe the salary to those people is $2,500, per year. Now, they are nice people. I like the Ministers without Portfolio, but I do not think they are doing very much.

I will tell the hon. member the reason why that came about. Only two years ago I was appointed Minister without Portfolio in the beginning of 1958.

Members downtown, senior members of the law profession, everybody I knew, thought that I was getting full ministerial pay. They said: "What does the Minister without Portfolio entitle you to?" I said: "Well, it must entitle me to the initials after my name of W.P." They would say: "What does that stand for?" I said: "Without pay."

I came up to this Legislature 52 weeks a year, or as many weeks as there was a meeting of Cabinet and it was almost once a week. It reached the time when I was up here two days a week. It reached the time when I was up here three days a week, without getting a single extra penny in salary; and no other Minister without Portfolio was paid.

Not only that, but I discovered that having become Minister without Portfolio I could no longer use the members' stationery and had to pay for all the stationery, business cards and all my correspondence out of my own pocket. That year it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $400. I had no secretarial staff, except that the secretary to the Cabinet very kindly permitted me to use in an emergency his own secretary to dictate a few letters in the course of a week.

In my nine years as a private member I never used the stenographic services of anybody in this building. I paid for all this out of my own pocket in my law office downtown.

I will say this, that it was brought to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) who was preoccupied with the affairs of the province, that hon. Ministers without Portfolio were called upon to do a tremendous amount, serving on various subcommittees of Cabinet and individual assignments, and it was meet and proper that they should receive pay. I do not believe that the time—having been a Cabinet Minister without Portfolio—I do not believe that the time that is spent by the hon. Ministers without Portfolio is compensated for by the amount that they obtain and it ill behooves the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) to make such aspersions.

I do not question the salary which is paid to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). The hon. leader of the Opposition knows better than anybody in this House how many days in the course of a 365-day year he spends in this House. I spend, subject to the holidays, every single day. I have closed my law practice up. I have no other income except what I obtain as a Cabinet Minister and I do not like it, year in and year out, and I didn't even as a private member not in the Cabinet, when members of the Opposition cast aspersions or innuendoes on the salaries paid to the members of the government in charge of the administration of a tremendous department and with tremendous responsibilities in respect to the policies and the expenditures of monies.

I do not begrudge a single penny which is given to the hon. leader of the Opposition in his personal capacity or for his staff or for the hon. members of the other group in this House. Mr. Chairman, no other province, no other province in this country, in this nation of ours, is as generous with the hon. members of the Opposition as this government.

Mr. Bryden: None other has a billion dollar budget.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Now we will just make a comparison.

Question 1 to the provinces of Canada: does your government pay the salary of the secretary of the hon. leader of the Opposition and, if so, how much? British Columbia: yes, $3,200. Alberta: no. Saskatchewan: yes, $253 per month or $570 annually. Manitoba: $550 annually. Ontario: at that time it was $4,000. Hon. members know what the present salary is. Quebec—

Mr. MacDonald: What date is this for?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This is a couple of years ago when we were considering this. Quebec: $4,000. New Brunswick: no.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is peddling history, not fact.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am just bringing the hon. member up to date on what the situation was.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is not up to date.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member can correct me.

Question No. 2: does your government make provision for the services of an executive assistant or assistants or economists in the Opposition office, and if so what do they receive as salary?

Quebec: $7,500 a year. New Brunswick: no. Nova Scotia: no. Prince Edward Island: no. Newfoundland: no. British Columbia:

yes, $5,000 a year. Alberta: no. Saskatchewan: no. Manitoba: no. Ontario: then $7,000, presently $9,000.

Does your government provide maintenance for the Opposition office by way of stationery, typewriters and other supplies and, if so, how much?

Quebec provides office space and supplies, no amount given. New Brunswick, the same. Nova Scotia, the same. Prince Edward Island, only during the session. Newfoundland, the same as Quebec. British Columbia, the same. Alberta, the same. Saskatchewan, the same. Manitoba, the same. We in Ontario then provided office space plus $2,000 for supplies. The total amount now is $18,500, and it is within the discretion of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) to dispose of that amount as he sees fit.

I will not go into the question any further although I have some other statistics. But I say this categorically: no province in Canada is as generous with the personal income of the leader of the Opposition or with the facilities provided for the members of the Opposition or for a minority group. They do not even come near. We are in the tens of thousands and they are in the mere hundreds.

And I say this, I am surprised that the hon. members supporting the government have put up with their own facilities so long. I was fortunate because I had a law office downtown and I had a secretary available to me whose salary I paid for completely out of my pocket. Every letter I dictated on behalf of my constituents for 10 years was paid for out of my own pocket—

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. Minister think that is good?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No.

Mr. Bryden: Then why does he not do something about it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: But it ill behooves a member of the Opposition to claim that others are getting advantages that they have not got.

Mr. Bryden: Nobody claimed that.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They did. I say this to the supporters of the government, as a private member I did not have available to me not even one minute or one page of the research facilities of this government in nine years. I did all my own research. Let the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) get up and tell the House, does he make, as I did as a private member of this House, all of the research himself, does nobody supply him with any of the material?

Mr. Bryden: I will be glad to get up and tell the hon. Minister all about it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I suggest to the hon. supporters of the government: gentlemen, if there is anybody that is hard done by it is they. I have been in those offices that they share together. I have not been in the offices of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), I do not know how many square feet he has, but when I see 17 and 20 government members with one telephone available to them in a private office, they are the men who are being hard done by, and perhaps it is because this government is so generous with the Opposition that they have not had the advantages.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, may I state to the hon. Provincial Secretary, sir, when he asked this rhetorical question and wonders how much longer the hon. private members on the government side are going to put up with this situation; may I say: just stick around, not very much longer.

It is in this mood that I have asked these questions, not with any innuendo or impression that I feel the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) is being overpaid or in any regard such as that. Just one further thing with the figures that the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) brought down. I am afraid I did not write them down as fast as he was giving them, but did he state that as well as the salary and expenses of $21,000, which the hon. leader of the Opposition gets, there is an added amount of $18,000 available for his staff? Thank you.

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, as the Minister possibly more responsible for supplying these things than any other hon. Minister, I thought perhaps the House might be interested to know just what the hon. members of the Opposition have, and what space the government members have.

When I came into this House ten years ago, as far as I know, I have never been in the Opposition headquarters over here, but I think there was one room with possibly an annex to it. The CCF Party had one room. Now I do not know whether I have been too kind to the Opposition or not, but since being Minister of Public Works I have felt that they had a rightful place around these buildings, and I have endeavoured to help them out as much as possible.

I still do not know how many offices there are out there on that side, but I think there are about three more than there were when I became Minister of Public Works. And another office that they have not mentioned here this morning at all—and I can only go back ten years in this House, but I have understood that the members of the Opposition outside of the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman, about the only office he had was where one hangs one's coat out here. That was what was supplied to the members of the Opposition years ago. But upstairs on the fourth floor, this government has even gone so far as to supply the Liberal Party with a caucus room.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Connell: It is more than any other party ever had in Opposition, and they are taking up space there that could well be used for office space of which we are so short.

Now the CCF Party, in addition to their room down here—which is about the prime space in this building in my opinion—they have another office up on the third floor and each of the members of the New Democratic Party has a desk and telephones to himself.

Of our people over here, there are about 15 hon. members who have to be in one office. They have one chair and no secretarial staff. Now I might go on and add this: the Opposition are critical of us for not planning. I do hope to have some announcements about our Queen's Park extension, but going back to what the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) said the other day with regard to planning, I announced a year ago—and I hope he will not be telling me right after this that it was his idea to supply space for private members, but I do hope that in the final analysis, when we get our planning done, that in this north wing where The Department of Education is now, we are going to have offices, as I mentioned a year ago, somewhat similar to those in Ottawa.

Now, whether it will be one or two or three members to an office, I do not know. But that is in our plan, so I hope the Opposition will give this government a little credit for a little foresight. We have done a great deal, there is more to be done yet, and we will get it done.

Mr. Bryden: This has been a challenge to me; do I not get a chance to answer? Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister challenged me to get up and say—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On a point of information, that is all I wanted to know.

Mr. Bryden: If it is of any interest to the hon. Minister, and presumably it is or he would not have asked the question, I do not get any research assistance from anybody, I do my own research; I write my own speeches and prepare my own material. I think a member is entitled to get some assistance.

It is fine to say that the backbenchers on the government side have no research assistance, which is true, but let us bear in mind that the government itself has behind it all the resources of the public service to provide information for it. And the backbenchers on the government side do not have the same sort of load to carry as members of the Opposition who have to try to keep up with the government that has hundreds of thousands, indeed millions of dollars' worth of facilities behind it.

Now, as for the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), I would like to say that I personally appreciate what I think has been a very genuine effort on his part to recognize the problems of private members, particularly on this side of the House. I think he has done the best he can in a difficult situation, but let us face the fact that the situation is very unsatisfactory.

The hon. Minister referred to what he called an office that we have on the third floor. Well, it is a piece cut out of a corridor, it is not an office. It is true that we have some desks that were taken out of storage since they were surplus for civil service purposes. We managed to get one each for our members, but our hon. leader still has no private office. Any visitor who wanders in for any purpose whatsoever comes directly into the place where the hon. leader's desk is situated. I think any person who has a heavy load of responsibility is entitled to some privacy and to some opportunity to carry on his work in private and to have callers sifted out as between those who really need to see him and those who can see other people.

I do not think anybody on this side of the House has ever suggested that the backbenchers on the government side have been well dealt with in this matter. In fact I have wondered for the longest time why they have put up with it. I never saw such a pusillanimous bunch in my life. They have no facilities at all. I admit with the very inadequate facilities we have we are a little better off than they are, but I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that you could go the length and breadth of this continent and you would not find any business anywhere that would fail so completely to provide people associated with it, who were considered to have responsibilities, with resources to carry on their work.

A member of the Legislature, if our theory of government means anything, has a responsible position. Yet he does not have the facilities of a clerk in the public service and I think that is a disgraceful state of affairs. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has said that there are difficulties, that there are problems of space, with which I agree. But I think that the time has come when the hon. members of the Legislature should get some priority. I think other space outside this building can be found for government departments that are now located in it, and all or most of the building can be turned over to the work of the legislative assembly, a very important, in fact the central part of which is the work of the hon. members of the legislative assembly.

I think sometimes that we are considered to be perhaps a little lower down the scale than grade 1 clerks as far as importance is concerned. Maybe that is the fact, but if it is, then our whole theory of government is wrong and we have been telling the people lies for years. I think that it would be proper to say that this building, or as much of it as is required, should be turned over to provide the members with facilities, with offices. Not elaborate offices, but at least private offices where they can carry on their work.

I appreciate the plan which the hon. Minister of Public Works has in mind, but I would like to see something more than a plan.

Hon. Mr. Connell: The hon. member wanted this building torn down a year ago.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to see a more efficient building here and then none of these problems would arise, but I am assuming the hon. Minister will not accept my excellent advice on that, so I am suggesting he takes what he has—the government take what it has—and make it available in the first instance for the members and find other suitable accommodation for departments that would necessarily be displaced.

His plan, as far as I can see, is for some time in the remote future. For all we know he may not even be the Minister when it comes time to implement it. But I am concerned about the situation right now, and I would like to see better facilities right now for the Liberal members, for the New Democratic members and for the long-suffering multitude on the backbenches of the Conservative ranks. I would be glad to stand up and be their champion; in fact, I would even be willing to try to organize a union for them.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): We do not want that.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to read something that will make the hon. members of the Opposition happy to some extent. I am talking about the official Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: Obviously we have a little political coup in the making.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have a little clipping here. Now, I do not know the date of this but it is within the last year, I believe. And it would be interesting to note that the period referred to is for more than four decades, that is for more than 40 years—I want you to guess, see if you can figure out where this province is before I let you know.

The clipping reads:

OPPOSITION GETS OFFICES AT PUBLIC EXPENSE

For more than four decades the Saskatchewan Liberal Party has maintained a spacious provincial headquarters in a downtown office block in the capital city even when a Liberal government was esconced in the legislative building.

That is the office of the Saskatchewan Liberal party.

The other day the Liberals vacated their premises, lock, stock and barrel and big trucks carted off tons of files and other office trappings to the legislative building itself.

Now Ross Thatcher, Saskatchewan's Liberal leader, puts his feet under a desk a few doors away from the lair of [the then] Premier T. C. Douglas. This cosy arrangement stems from complaints voiced by Mr. Thatcher about——and remember this is a 40-year period we are talking about.

This cosy arrangement stemmed from complaints voiced by Mr. Thatcher about the alleged shabby treatment of the Opposition.

And who gave the shabby treatment? The Saskatchewan CCF government. After four decades—

Mr. MacDonald: And who corrected it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Let us see what made Mr. Thatcher so happy.

He says: "Premier Douglas agreed to oblige and two adjoining offices were made available."

Compare that with the facilities Ontario's hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Yes, have a look at it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I continue:

As far as Mr. Thatcher and the Liberal Party are concerned this arrangement has its practical dollars and cents value. The Liberal Party will save the tidy sum of almost $10,000 annually.

Now, how does that, with the provision of office space and one secretary compare with the facilities available for the hon. leader of the Opposition here?

Mr. Bryden: Is this not a somewhat bigger province?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will say what Mr. Thatcher says:

For the moment, Mr. Thatcher indicates he will settle for less. The placing of a researcher of his choosing on the Opposition staff at public expense.

Mr. Chairman, we not only have done for the hon. leader of the Opposition of this province what has made Mr. Thatcher evidently quite content, we have gone far beyond and we have included even a very generous provision for the other minority group.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of personal privilege on which I wish to speak. I did not intend to say a thing but it does seem to me in view of the manner which this debate has taken, and the political undertones that have been present, particularly in the latter parts of the debate, that I should make this statement.

For myself and my personal salary, in that respect I do not want to comment. There will be those who will say it should be lower or those who might think it should be higher. I assure you I will never ask on my personal behalf for a penny. I only make this point, Mr. Chairman, that prior to the time that I was required to divest myself not only of a legal practice but of other substantial income, I had a far greater income than I have now personally.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: So did I; so did we all.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly, and to the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) I would say this: that I bear him no animosity whatsoever in the way this thing was raised. But now that it has taken the course it has, and the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) has suggested that we were complaining and whining, let me say this: I am not speaking for myself. That is the only point I want to make.

I am speaking for the role—as the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) so aptly put it—the role of the Opposition in a parliamentary system. I am speaking for every hon. member in this House, and I think the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) was perfectly right when he said that if we do not appreciate the significance and the importance of membership in this House, and in all parties, and on all sides, then we are failing in our duty and we are negligent because we are not doing as good a job as we should. This is the year 1960. We talk about education—

An hon. member: The year 1962.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, we are in the 60s. We are talking about educational costs that are a hundred times what they were supposedly in the years gone by. Project that thinking into this role and you get some idea of the costs of running this Opposition, for example.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the point I want to come to. This is the point I hesitated to bring up but I think it is important for the people of Ontario that they should know and that they do not go away with a misconception of what this is all about.

There is $18,000 provided for the Opposition offices and that is taken up basically with three salaries. The salary of Dr. Upper—which has been mentioned several times—and the salaries of two stenographers. The balance of about $2,500, just about $2,500, is available for telephone calls, for research, for stationery, for all the other multitudinous items of operating an office of the nature of this office. I can assure hon. members that that $2,500 is not nearly sufficient to pay for the costs that we have incurred in that operation year by year.

Mr. Chairman, I am speaking in this fashion because there may be others in the future who will occupy this position and I think I can speak for the position and not for myself. I can tell hon. members that I am in the fortunate position, due to no fault of my own, where this does not necessarily mean an extraordinary problem to myself, but for the role of the Opposition it is a real problem.

The cost of operating that office, together with my official function, will be in the neighbourhood of $100,000 by the end of next year that I have been required to put into this job.

I have not said this publicly before, but if we are going to debate, if the merit of this thing was debated here today, then I make an appeal to the goodness of the people opposite to look to democracy, to look to the dignity of this House, to look to the efficiency and the well-being of the House. It is not effective as it should be and the money is not available to the individual hon. members and to the hon. members opposite to my left and to this group, that is required to perform the effective job that is required to be done on the part of the people of Ontario.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that if the people of Ontario knew the costs of this type of thing they would willingly spend this money for more efficiency and more effectiveness. I regret the manner in which this debate has proceeded by making reference to what has gone on 20 or 30 years ago. That is immaterial. Comparing this budget with Saskatchewan is absolutely irrelevant. Compare it with New York, compare it with the states and the jurisdictions of government that are comparable to this government and I think you would find, Mr. Chairman, that the situation that prevails here is that facilities are not available for private members, for the Opposition groups, to perform the job that the people of Ontario expect.

They do not expect that these positions be available only to those who may, due to circumstances, be in a position where they can personally undertake these expenditures. They expect that government funds be used for this purpose.

It is for that reason that I rise, Mr. Chairman, a matter of regret on my part, but I think in view of the manner in which this debate has taken place, I mean in the tone in which it has taken place, it is imperative that this record be put clear and be made known and that something be done about it.

I very much appreciate the observations that were made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). I think he spoke with a genuine appreciation of the dignity and significance of the role of the Opposition. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to you that all hon. members take the opportunity to read what Churchill said about the Opposition, what Lord Simon said, what brilliant parliamentarians have said. They said it really is the keystone of our democratic system, more than any other part of Parliament, and I believe that.

I am not speaking of my person. There are others who could perform this function more ably than I. But for the institution and for the position, I unhesitatingly get up and make this appeal.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) permit a question?

As the one who led the thing off and started it off because I was irked at the words of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards), I gather from what the hon. leader of the Opposition now says, that he completely repudiates those innuendoes the other night from the hon. member for Wentworth.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I see that the hon. leader of the Opposition nods his head affirmatively.

Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word or two on this subject. Several years ago when I came here for the first time I must confess I was disappointed, and even shocked, at the lack of facilities provided for a private member, sir. Hon. members may recall I complained very strongly at that time.

The facilities are less than adequate now, but in all fairness I think we should recognize a number of improvements have taken place. The indemnity has been increased, the expense allowance has been increased, the dining-room has been improved, so that at least we can take a person in for a sandwich without being totally ashamed.

The committee rooms have been greatly improved and we are advised and assured by the government through the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) that we will be given adequate office space in the education wing when a new building is built across the street. Those plans are more than tentative, of course, because the property across the street has been acquired and the old buildings standing on that property are being removed. When the new building is built space will be available here and I am confident that the private members will be given the office facilities and the secretarial help that they require.

There is certainly justice in the complaints that were made here today, but in fairness to the government we have to recognize these five very important improvements that have taken place in the last two or three years. It seems to me that the complaints which have been registered should be moderated because of those improvements.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I am a little astounded at the methods employed by the Opposition here.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): What kind of office does the hon. Minister without Portfolio work in?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A pretty good office. Does the hon. member object to that?

Mr. Bukator: To the hon. Minister, yes, I certainly do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member object to me having an office?

Mr. Bukator: I just say, what kind has he got?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this is just the point I am trying to make. First the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) gets up and he makes some rather underhanded charges, and as a matter of fact pointedly asks the press to pay attention to what he is saying and he hopes they publish his comments. He goes along on the same thing he started last week when he made some comment about the Ministers without Portfolio doing nothing and getting $2,500 a year. I meant to comment on the kind of work Ministers without Portfolio do, but the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) has done a very good job of explaining that. I hope the hon. member for Wentworth feels somewhat ashamed of himself for the comments he made about that.

But we go along in the debate and of course there is some umbrage taken at the attack made on the Ministers without Portfolio, and it creates some heat in the debate. Then the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) gets up trying to throw some cold water on this heat. He suggested perhaps we should be discussing this in a calmer light, something should be done for all the hon. members; and some other hon. member made some comments—I think it was the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden)—that hon. members here are treated “lower than clerks,” as if they were “lower than clerks.” I suggest the reason why members of Parliament generally are not treated and do not treat themselves as well as they should is because they are afraid to, because of the method by which political charges are hurled about recklessly and the impression this leaves with the general public.

The hon. member for Wentworth should remember that when he makes charges like this: “that Ministers do nothing and they get paid too much,” that there are thousands who feel the same way about members of Parliament generally. They have an impression that members of Parliament do nothing but draw their breath and their pay, and it is because of these wild charges that the public gets this impression. The average person in this province, in this country, does not realize the amount of public service, the amount of time put into public service by members of Parliament.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), in his speech on the budget the other day, also made some comment about Ministers without Portfolio. Now, I presume the hon. member for Wentworth does not suggest that a Minister with a department should not be entitled to a car. I presume he does not mean that. Does he believe that?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, if you would allow me the floor next I would be pleased to answer that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member answer the question?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I think it is not a matter, Mr. Chairman, of answering out of context.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Answer yes or no—does he believe the Minister in charge of a department is entitled to a car? Does he believe that? This is the sort of question, Mr. Chairman, when it is directed at a Minister and the Minister answers in that fashion he is accused of evasion. I asked a direct question which could have been answered yes or no.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I think there are too many cars and chauffeurs available in this province. Does that answer the hon. Minister's question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it is an evasive answer.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: It is the same way a Minister answers, that is what the hon. Minister suggested.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be prepared at any time, Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, to justify to the public my use of a car. In case there is some doubt about it—and that is the reason really I got up—in case there is any doubt about it, the Ministers without Portfolio, unless they are in charge of a department, do not have a car and chauffeur assigned to them. The hon. member may have given this impression to the public and I want to make sure they do not have this impression. They do not have a car and chauffeur assigned to them.

If the hon. member is going to insist that a Minister with a department, a Cabinet Minister in this great province—he keeps telling us what a large province it is, and a great budget and so on—if the hon. member does not think that a Minister of the Crown in charge of a department is entitled to a car, then perhaps he ought to talk to the hon. member at his left who, as the reeve of North York, was the first reeve to get himself a car and a chauffeur. I think a Minister of the Crown is at least as busy as he was as a reeve.

Let me add to what the hon. Provincial Secretary has stated. I have been in my insurance office since my appointment as a Minister—in the first year, as a Minister without a department—I was in it about three hours a week. Since I have been put in charge of a department I have been in my office for about 20 minutes to pick up some documents. I do not like to go on and start bringing out a bleeding heart about how much this job is costing me or anything of that nature. All I am suggesting is the hon. member for Wentworth is not doing himself any justice, or this legislative assembly any justice, or any of the hon. members any justice, or the Opposition any justice, he is not doing them justice at all, by hurling these charges around because they put all elected members in a bad light. As far as the public is concerned he is giving them the impression that all of us here are getting paid too much. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for York South could be accused of that too, because he put on a political play a couple of years ago when the indemnities were increased. He did not think we should get this increase in indemnity. He put all sorts of qualifications on it, giving the impression to the public that we were getting paid sufficiently, and therefore the additional indemnity was not earned and was not deserved.

If we want to keep these debates on a high level, let us begin them at a high level and they will remain that way, not start them off with reckless charges, making us all look bad in the eyes of the public and causing the hon. leader or someone else to get up on the opposite side and say, "Now, why can we not discuss this on a logical basis and do what we know is right? Let us not hurl around any political charges."

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, first of all let it not be said, sir, that I am throwing any innuendoes, for I am prepared to make positive statements, I am prepared to repeat them at this time, and I am prepared to be heard anytime or at any place on this issue. I have been talking since this session of the Legislature on the matter of economy. If you want to know what I think and if hon. members opposite want to know what I think, I will tell you. I think in too many cases we have been spending money like a bunch of drunken sailors. I am concerned about it.

In my remarks with respect to the hon. Ministers without Portfolio, I indicated that the taxation went up 20 per cent in this province last year. With respect to the hon. Ministers without Portfolio and I made it clear—and I make it clear again, I do not make any personal charges, I simply believe—that the theory of Parkinson's law is in effect in the present Cabinet, I think it is growing beyond the need of individual Ministers. It is adding to the cost of government at the expense of the taxpayers of this province.

Mr. Chairman, one of the hon. gentlemen opposite suggested that I should be ashamed of myself. Let me make it abundantly clear I am not ashamed of myself; I believe in what I am saying and I am going to go on saying it notwithstanding the attacks which have come from the other side.

An hon. member: What did the hon. member's leader say?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, if my hon. leader is ashamed of me and as the hon. member suggested, if my leader said this, I was not in the House—

Mr. Singer: He said no such thing.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am sure he will tell me privately if he said that, but I doubt if he said it.

Mr. Singer: He said no such thing and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the remarks that I made—that I hoped this would get in the press—I repeat them, I hope they do, I hope that the remarks of one of the hon. gentlemen opposite get in the press when he suggested that the NDP members—and these were the words—even have a desk.

I hope that gets in the press. I hope the public knows that some hon. members even have a desk. Because outside of this little—what is it, about two and a half square feet—this is the only desk space that is provided to me. So I hope it does get in the press.

Now with respect to the question which was asked by the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), he suggested that my hon. friend to the left had a car when he was elected chief officer, when he was elected as reeve of North York. How he can apply that to this principle is beyond my comprehension. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to say what I think and if there is anybody who thinks I am casting innuendoes, if they will ask me to clarify my position I shall be delighted to do so.

This is a principle, Mr. Chairman, that is very important. It has been supported already by one backbencher on the government side and that is the principle that the Opposition in any government is just as important as the role of government.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to a little lesson in history which was so kindly given to me by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), let me remind this House that I was not even voting in those days. I am not interested in the history of this province, I am interested in the future of this province and that is what we are here for.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, there is a principle here and the principle is simply this: we are elected to represent the people, we are entitled to a certain limited amount of facilities. I say that the facilities which are provided are not adequate. It seems to me that those opposite say that the facilities which are provided are adequate, in fact they stated that they have been very generous.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest their generosity does not go far enough. I suggest that the people of the province are suffering because of the inadequacy of these facilities and I suggest that the constant theme which seems to come from the opposite side every time we suggest something progressive, referring back almost two decades ago to the government of that day, is invalid. I think it is hardly, shall I say, in good taste, by the—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be thrown off by the remarks of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) at all. If he wants to go on interrupting, I am prepared to stand here and wait until he is finished, because I believe in that principle and I am not going to let it go until I have had my say.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said by some of the hon. members opposite that they get my point. Now if they have my point, I will stop talking, but I intend to bring the matter up again next year and the year after that and as long as I am here until such time as the situation is corrected.

Mr. Singer: I want to say a word or two on this, Mr. Chairman. I had no intention of getting into this debate at all until the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman), who has appointed himself as my personal historian and critic, could not resist a few remarks directed at me. Now I would like to say this to the hon. Minister, I would invite him to come up into my riding with his car, take the Conservative nomination and let us have a go at the next election. Let us have some voters decide this personal vendetta.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wanted to know if a reeve can have a car, why a Cabinet Minister cannot. Is there anything wrong with that question?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I share with my hon. colleague from Wentworth (Mr. Edwards) and with my hon. leader, the criticisms that they have put voice to this morning.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is any secret that we on this side of the House believe that in the 22 Cabinet Ministers the government has and the seven or eight others whom they have on the boards of the ONR, the water resources commission, the hospital commission, and on and on, that they have some 30 or roughly a half of their hon. members paid substantially more than all of the hon. members of the Opposition. I do not think it is any secret that this government, when they put about 30 of their members into these categories, stand in very poor comparison with, say, the Cabinet of the United Kingdom, some six of whom ran the war effort in the United Kingdom; the Cabinet of the President of the United States, some 10 of whom seem to be able to run that country. The point we are making is that the government does not need 30 people at extra pay to run the province, to run it efficiently. This is a valid criticism and a good criticism.

This business of cars is something that the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) thought was a great issue. It had not been raised within my hearing on this side of the House, but he brought it up so let us deal with that for a minute. It is rather interesting to note, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) said—his tone certainly implied—is it not amazing that a reeve should have a car and a chauffeur. Now, let me say this, the township of North York is the second largest municipality in Ontario. It has a greater assessment than any other municipality except the city of Toronto. The reeve of that municipality who serves without a board of control—and when the estimates of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass) come up we will have something to say about boards of control and so on—and who is the sole administrative officer, is the only representative on the Metropolitan council.

The job of the reeve of the township of North York—and my friends from Scarborough and Etobicoke will agree with me on a similar style for the job of a reeve of the township of Etobicoke and Scarborough—is one without parallel within municipal government in this province of Ontario. The voters of the township of North York accepted this decision that I made and accepted the same decision in my successor.

Now, if there was any criticism to be made about the reeve of the township of North York having a car, that surely should lie with the voters and the municipal council of the township of North York. The only reason I deal with this at all, Mr. Chairman, is to show that it is typical of what emanates from the government benches on every occasion of this sort. It is a smoke screen and a series of red herrings to try to becloud the issue. They will not face up to it, they will not acknowledge that they are doing wrong, and they will not respect a member from this side.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I just want to get it clear for the record that I made no charge that the reeve of the township of North York was not entitled to a car. I pointed out that the reeve had a car and certainly a Cabinet Minister does just as much work as a reeve.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will sit at 2:00 o'clock and have a night session. There will be no night session Tuesday night. We will go on with the estimates of The Department of Mines on Monday at 2:00 o'clock.

In moving the adjournment of the House I move that we—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) give us a tentative schedule for next week so we will have an idea of what estimates are likely to be called?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This is the problem I mentioned a week ago of attempting to give any firm forecast. I never know when we are going to have a debate such as we had this morning, if it may be termed a debate, and therefore my timetable may not be exactly as planned. In any event I will attempt to get on next week with the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) and with the hon. Minister of Energy Resources and Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay). In addition to that we have the Budget debate and, of course, there are all the matters on the order paper, any one of which I may call.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.05 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 12, 1962

The House met at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Again we are very glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome as our guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery Queen Mary Public School, Peterborough and in the west gallery Oak Park Junior High School, Toronto.

Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Energy Board Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): This is a bill which amends The Ontario Energy Board Act to clarify the rate-fixing provisions.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question which I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) which may be related to what he has just introduced.

My question is: is the energy board going to delay decision on the rate base application of Union Gas until the Langford commission has reported whether cushion gas in storage areas is a legitimate factor in rate base calculation?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, I inquired this morning from the department as to when the Langford committee's report would be available and it was thought that it would be available in several weeks. I understand from the energy board that it is unlikely that the decision of the energy board would be given much before June and therefore the Langford committee report will no doubt be available before that time.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the hon. Minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Are we to have the Langford report before this session concludes?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I hope that is so.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to announce to the House that I have asked the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) to request The Department of External Affairs at Ottawa to take the necessary steps to withdraw the application of Ontario Hydro to the international joint commission relating to the diversion of additional waters at Niagara Falls.

I spoke on this matter—I think it was in the fall, perhaps in the winter session—explaining the application which was then before the international joint commission pointing out that it fell into three parts. One of these parts dealt with the application to study whether more water could be withdrawn for the purposes of creating hydro electricity at Niagara without destroying the beauty of Niagara Falls. In the meantime—and I pointed this out at that time in the House—the policy of the government was that no further water should be withdrawn if there was any possibility of affecting the beauty of the Falls by so doing.

Since then, the Lewiston plant of the New York Power Authority is now coming into operation and is withdrawing more of its share of the waters. The construction is going ahead with the control dams in the upper regions of the Niagara River. Until experience has been gathered from these two separate construction undertakings, it is advisable not to go ahead with this study in relation to withdrawing any more water from the Niagara River at Niagara Falls.

Therefore, I have asked the hon. Provincial Secretary, as I said, to make application to the department in Ottawa to withdraw this part of the application before the international joint commission. I am quite confident that the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) would like to make some comment on this, because he has been most interested in it.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the decision of the energy board in not withdrawing any more water from the Niagara River.

I have had many organizations—the council of Niagara Falls, Stamford Township, and everybody, as a matter of fact, in the Niagara Falls riding—I have had many letters sent to me pertaining to this very matter and I am going to commend the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) for taking this stand. I appreciate the fact that he was good enough to let me know about this decision before he presented it to the House this afternoon.

I feel I would be remiss in my duties to the people in my riding if I did not thank him for making this decision. I know a lot of work was done on it, Mr. Speaker, and I know that it required a lot of heart-searching, I would say, to make this decision. I find they have done right by us and we appreciate it.

I was wondering, by way of a question, if the hon. Minister has felt there is a possibility—and I know that he cannot answer this immediately—of building a dam down in the narrow part of the Niagara River? There is a drop-down of about 18 or 20 feet of water below the Falls. Quite a reservoir of water could be built behind that and could possibly supply the power being sought immediately from the Falls, without destroying the natural beauty in any way.

This is a point worth considering. I do not do this very often, as hon. members know, I am not that type; but in this instance I think the government is worthy of recognition for the decision it has made.

Mr. Speaker: Since the Speaker was asked a question last week, I would like to say at this time that the bust of the late Agnes Macphail has been located and when a pedestal is obtained, it will be placed in a suitable position in the Parliament buildings.

Orders of the day.

House in committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MINES

On vote 1201:

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, this is the first time that it has been my privilege to present to this House the estimates of The Department of Mines. This has become my duty as the result of the death, last autumn, of my friend and colleague, James Maloney, who for three years had occupied the post of Minister of Mines with dignity and distinction. Mr. Maloney's passing is a personal sorrow to me and, I know, a great loss to the Ontario Legislature.

Since my appointment, Mr. Chairman, to The Department of Mines, I have had very good reason to be thankful that I inherited a staff so well-trained in their duties, and so helpful in passing on their knowledge, that my initiation to my duties has been made much easier than it otherwise might have been.

During 1960 the production of minerals in Ontario reached an all-time high. The total value was only slightly under $1 billion. Although there was a drop of about $35 million in the total for 1961, it was still the second best year in history, and the reduction is more than accounted for by the loss in uranium markets. The Review of Activities in 1961, which I tabled here last week, contains a great deal of information which I commend to the attention of hon. members.

I must confess to a feeling of concern, common to all residents of northern Ontario, a concern that there seems so little appreciation, due to the lack of information, in this southern part of the province, of the vast importance to the whole economy of that relatively sparsely-populated 90 per cent of the land area of Ontario that lies north of North Bay.

Some 18 per cent of Ontario's total production comes from the primary industries—agriculture, mining, forestry, fisheries and trapping. Now in 1959—the latest year for which I have the figures—agriculture was credited with 6.5 per cent of the total provincial product, closely followed by mining with 6.4 per cent, forestry, 1.2, and fishing and trapping 0.2 per cent.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that these comparisons are very revealing. Agriculture and mining are far ahead of the others, with only one-tenth of one per cent dividing them. Even that small gap is seen to be closing if we go back one year, to 1958, when the two industries represented, respectively, 7.7 and 5.5 per cent of the total.

With the growing urbanization which Canada and Ontario are experiencing, every year more of southern Ontario's lush agricultural land is being lost to industrial use and what we could term suburban sprawl. That is a matter of simple observation that would come as a shock to any former resident of these parts who returned after an absence of a few years. A drive through the Niagara peninsula, for instance, or north, east or west of Toronto would offer all the evidence needed that our farm lands are shrinking at an alarming rate.

I feel that I must carry these comparisons still further in support of my assessment of mining as the most vitally important of all our primary industries, an industry that deserves, and must have, the support, understanding and co-operation of this Legislature if it is to continue to thrive and have the enormously important part in our economy that it is equipped and ready to have.

So, Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. members to some statistics concerning our exports. Ours is a trading nation—the fifth biggest trader in the world—and it is scarcely an exaggeration to say that our national life or death depends upon the success with which we maintain our present markets and develop new ones.

In 1960, Canada's exports of minerals totalled $2,167 million. Exports of wood products and paper were valued at $1,592 million, and agricultural exports totalled $831.5 million. Thus, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that, on the national scale, our mineral exports are far ahead of the other primary products. Unfortunately, I do not have this breakdown of exports by provinces, but since Ontario's mineral production is more than 37 per cent of the total for all of Canada, it is certainly safe to say that mineral products would not suffer in any comparison of the relative importance of exports on the provincial scale.

Mr. Chairman, if we go back to 1958—the latest year for which comparative figures are available—we learn that Ontario's primary forest production—carrying it to the point at which the timber is sold in the form of logs—in that year was $110,138,000. In the same year our mineral production was $801,280,000.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I need not tell this House that I make these comparisons not with any idea of down-grading our other resources industries, which, of course, are so important to our economy and essential to our way of life, but only to put things in their proper perspective, and to emphasize the fact that mining is far and away the most important primary industry in this country today—in point of dollars.

I would like to see us put first things first and frankly, I do not think that in this province that has always been done and is not, in all respects, being done yet.

In support of this contention, I will refer to the report tabled here a few days ago by the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner), and compiled by the Public Lands Investigation Committee, established in 1959. This committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. J. F. McFarland, Ontario's mining commissioner, was made up of Mr. H. C. Rickaby, then Deputy Minister of Mines, and Dr. M. E. Hurst, the director of the geological branch, as representatives of this department, with Major-General Howard Kennedy, a consultant to The Department of Lands and Forests, as vice-chairman. The other lands and forests representatives on the committee were Mr. F. W. Beatty, the Surveyor-General of Ontario, and Mr. J. S. Yoerger, an assistant Deputy Minister. Members appointed to the committee from outside the government were Mr. John Beattie, the Executive Director of the Ontario Mining Association and Mr. J. J. Rankin representing the Prospectors and Developers Association—and to these two great associations I pay tribute because they are of such great assistance to this department.

It is readily apparent, Mr. Chairman, that this was a committee of real experts in their various fields. They arrived at the recommendations incorporated in their report only after exhaustive investigations, hearings held at several points throughout the province, and the study of a great mass of briefs and documents submitted by interested individuals and organizations.

Let us look briefly at the committee's findings, Mr. Chairman. The report points out that, of the 412,582 square miles of land and water that make up the area of Ontario, only 2,360 square miles of mining land are shown on the tax roll as having been alienated from the Crown, or about one-half of one per cent of the area of Ontario. More than double this area, 5,238 square miles, has been set aside as park land.

An interesting projection of present trends shows that if the present rate of alienation for mining purposes and the cancellation of mining claims continue at the present rate, it will be 102 years before the area of alienated mining claims equals the present total area of provincial parks.

That is all very well. Certainly this province needs and benefits from our great wilderness areas and unspoiled recreational lands, but, at the same time, let us take a look at the comparative values and the revenues this province realizes.

Figures compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and The Ontario Department of Mines' statistician, as they appear in the Canada Year Book for 1957-1958, and the Economic Survey of Ontario, in 1956, show that the gross revenue per acre from mining land was $357.49, for a net revenue of $165.43. That compares with $53.08 and $30.53 for agriculture, and $2.91 and $1.83 for forestry in the same period.

Surely it is self-evident, on the strength of these figures, that the mineral industry is deserving of all the support that the government can give it—support not for the mining interests so much as for our whole economy, which depends on it for so much of its strength.

Again, Mr. Chairman, let me emphasize that I have no quarrel with those who would like to take full advantage of our natural resources other than the minerals in the ground. I realize perfectly well how essential are our forest industries, and how large a part pulp and paper exports play in our financial well-being, as is evidenced in my own area. I realize that our great natural parks provide many tourist dollars, and pay real dividends in the health and well-being of our own people who find rest and relaxation in them.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I do contend—and it is a contention with which the land use committee agrees—is that there can be multiple use of a great deal of this land.

I quote from the report:

Mining operations seldom use all of the surface of the mining lands owned and leased. If all phases of the economy are to be developed, and inasmuch as the only sound economy is a diversified one, then provision should be made for multiple land use. In other words, no single natural resource should be permitted to exclude or prohibit the development of another. Mining differs from all other industries inasmuch as the miner must look for wealth which is often buried beneath the surface of the land; furthermore, mining can only be carried out where ore bodies occur.

That is the end of the quotation.

Taking that at its face value, the committee felt that any mining enterprise should hold surface rights only to the extent that these are necessary for successful conduct of the operation; but, on the other hand, it surely means, too, that where valuable mineral is known to exist, there should not be an automatic exclusion from whole areas as, under present conditions, there is in some of our provincial parks. Provided that all proper safeguards are exercised to protect the surrounding territory, I can see no reason that mining and forestry, or mining and recreation, cannot exist side by side.

Again I quote from the report:

The committee believes that the multiple use principle and the wise and proper use of the natural resources go hand in hand, and recommends that the concept of multiple land use be applied in provincial parks.

Mr. Chairman, I referred in my opening remarks to the annual production value of nearly $1 billion recorded by Ontario's mining industry. I should now like to add that in 1961 it required 86 separate mining operations—some among the world's biggest, others not so large—122 quarries and 731 clay, sand and gravel pits to make up this tremendous total.

Altogether, and this is very important, Mr. Chairman, to my way of thinking, the industry gave direct employment to more than 52,000 people. These 52,000 people with their families and dependants would, if brought together, settle a city bigger than Hamilton, and so certainly their status should be considered important in anything that affects our national or provincial well-being.

A great many people, residents of this province, if asked about the products of our mineral industry would very quickly show that they have little or no conception of its diversity. They might name gold, silver, nickel, copper, iron and uranium as the mineral products and bog down there. Actually, there are very close to half-a-hundred products of our mines, oil and gas wells, quarries and pits, all adding their share to the grand total.

I was up in Goderich the other day, Mr. Chairman, and went through the Sifto salt plant. What a tremendous operation that is. I had never even known that salt was taken out in quantities such as 450 tons a day, employing some 200 men. The salt was coming out from underground, on belts travelling very quickly, and most of it was going over to the United States to be placed on the roads. I always thought of salt as on the breakfast table. But there certainly is a great diversification in this mineral industry.

Perhaps it would be wise for me, in referring to the great value of our mineral production, to point out that this is not by any means all profit. It is a fact that in some years there is no great gap between operating costs and production total.

In 1961, when it happened that the spread was greater than for most years, with production slightly under $1 billion, the industry returned to the economy some $730 million in the form of capital plant expenditure, payroll, electricity and fuel, equipment and supplies, Workmen's Compensation payments, federal, provincial and municipal taxes, and all other operating costs. From the remaining 25 per cent must be found the funds for research, plant expansion and dividend payments.

Insofar as this government is concerned, I would point out that The Department of Mines—unlike several other departments that render equally essential services to the people of the province—is a revenue-producing branch of the government. That is to say, each year the revenue accruing to the Treasury from the various operations supervised by The Department of Mines exceeds the operating expenses of the department by a very wide margin. In the last fiscal year, for example, the total paid into the consolidated fund through royalty or production taxes, the issuance of miners' licences, leases, and from other sources amounted to $18.32 million, while the total of ordinary expenses for operating the department was only $1.58 million. That is a ratio of about twelve to one—certainly, I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, a good return on the investment.

With that in mind, and in consideration of the very great importance of the mining industry which my department serves, and for which I have the honour to speak in this House, I have no hesitation, whatever, in asking the hon. members to approve the expenditure necessary to enable us to carry on our programme for the forthcoming year.

We are going to need somewhat more than is usually necessary for the next fiscal year, and, as the hon. members will see, the total of ordinary and capital expenditures, including $13,000 statutory expenses, amounts to $3,105,000. I have no hesitation in asking for this increased sum and, indeed, I am proud that we will be in a position to render the additional services that will make it necessary. I intend to explain this more fully as I deal with the individual votes.

The main office of the department is the centre of the administrative services. It handles all operations that are not otherwise allocated to specific branches, including accounts and mine assessment, publicity and certain special committees. The total estimate for main office expenditures, as shown in vote 1201, is $371,000, plus $12,000 statutory. This, it will be noted, is $173,000 less than the main office allocation for the present year. This is accounted for by the transfer of the publications offices, including the cartography section, to the geological branch.

Included in the main office vote are the costs of operating the office of the mining commissioner. The commissioner, Mr. Chairman, fulfils a unique position in the government. He adjudicates disputes between mining interests with a minimum of formality and expense. During this calendar year the commissioner has held hearings in Toronto, and at several other points throughout the province, and has issued some 1,300 orders and judgments.

The geological staff of the department is made up of highly trained specialists in the geological sciences, men dedicated to this great work of mining, who are concerned mainly with mapping the geology of the province, and in providing prospectors and the mining industry generally with maps and reports as an aid in the search for, and development of, its mineral resources. In addition to the Toronto-based staff, resident geologists are maintained in the principal mining areas of the province. Their chief function is to acquire and make available the same sort of information on a more localized scale.

While a great deal of valuable work has been done in past years by the department's geologists, Ontario's land area which is amenable to mineralization, is so vast that most of it has never yet been mapped geologically, and to do so at the present rate would require more than 130 years.

With that in mind, two geologists were added to the staff last year, and we plan to acquire the services of five more in the coming fiscal year. I might add that these gentlemen are very hard to get because they are highly skilled men with specialized knowledge.

In addition to this, an agreement entered into with the federal government is doing a great deal to speed dissemination of knowledge about our mineral potential. In accordance with this agreement, a whole programme of airborne geophysical surveys is to be carried out until, in the course of the next few years, the entire province will be flown. Ground reconnaissance surveys will subsequently be made of the more interesting areas picked out in the survey.

So far, the first two phases of the over-all flying programme have been completed. In 1959 the first phase, covering a monumental 60,000 square miles in the extreme north-western part of the province, was flown. This was the biggest such project ever conducted anywhere in the world. Last year, another 35,000 square miles were flown to cover the area stretching eastward from the Manitoba boundary to a point some miles west of the lakehead, and north from the United States boundary to the parallel of latitude 53° 30'. The resulting maps have already been issued.

During the coming fiscal year we intend to complete the third phase of the programme to cover another 35,000 square miles, mainly north from Lake Superior. If hon. members will consult a map—and these maps are available for anybody—they will see that this comprises a very great part of the entire province.

It is obvious that until the information which is obtained, either by these surveys or by the more conventional ground methods, is made available to the public, it is of little practical value. Therefore, a concentrated effort is being made to have the maps and reports containing the information compiled and printed with the minimum loss of time. This, in turn, calls for additional personnel for our cartography section which is made up of highly skilled specialists in the art of map drawing.

It is in order to ensure the maximum co-ordination of effort among geologists, editorial staff and cartographers, that all publications personnel have been transferred from the main office establishment to the geological branch.

Our estimate of total expenditures for the geological branch in the coming year is $843,000, as set forth in vote 1202.

We now come to vote 1203 which calls for a total expenditure of $268,000 for the maintenance and operation of the mines inspection branch. This branch, whose engineers are graduates in specialized fields, with a successful record of service in private industry prior to their entry into the service of The Department of Mines, is responsible for safety regulations and other factors connected with the operation of mines.

Here I would like to state that the safety record that was established in Ontario's mining operations last year was one in which we can take pride. There were, throughout the year, 2,852 accidents reported, including 25 fatalities. This represents a fatality rate of 0.23 per million man-hours worked, a decrease of 40 per cent from the previous year. The rate of non-fatal accidents was 26 per million man-hours, a decrease of 13 per cent from the 1960 total. Now, Mr. Chairman, we all know and feel that while any industrial accident is to be deplored, and the department and the industry cannot rest upon their laurels, the improvement is certainly cause for gratification.

I might just mention the uncertainty in this, Mr. Chairman. I was up in the Hollinger Mine three weeks ago, down in the 4,500-foot level, and this morning or last night a miner was killed in the very spot that we were in, from some loose rock falling. Those are things which one cannot foresee; it is the uncertainty of the industry; but it is to be deplored and we assure you, sir, we are doing everything we can to prevent those deplorable conditions happening.

In addition to the staff in Toronto, engineers are located at seven other points throughout the province in centres convenient to the mining areas.

Included in the inspection branch estimates is $1,000, set by statute for the purpose of maintaining an account to defray the cost of mine rescue stations. Eventually, of course, all monies expended for this purpose are refunded by the mining industry.

The cable testing laboratory, operated by the inspection branch, provides an important and highly specialized service to the mining industry. The Mining Act requires that lengths of all cables used in mine hoisting be subjected, semi-annually, to tests in this laboratory, to ensure that their strength is such as to provide a sufficient margin of safety for the loads they are called upon to bear. The estimated cost of operating the cable testing laboratory for the coming year is shown under vote 1204 as $55,000.

As a fee is charged for each test, this cost is normally recovered directly from the industry. The Department of Mines is collaborating with the Ontario Mining Association in a long-term research project having to do with the non-destructive testing of wire ropes. Again, I wish to compliment them, and thank the Ontario Mining Association for the great help they have given us during the past year and their assurance of continuance of that help during this year.

The department's half of the cost is defrayed under the same vote for the cable testing laboratory.

Also covered under vote 1204 is the operation of the provincial assay office. The total cost of this important phase of our operations will be $88,000 during the forthcoming fiscal year. The assay office provides a vital service to prospectors and exploration and mining companies in giving a scrupulously accurate assay of the mineral content of rock and mineral specimens submitted for analysis. Although fees may be charged for this work, according to a fixed schedule of charges, by far the major part of it is done free of charge on the basis of coupons issued upon the recording of claims and the performance of assessment work. The details of this coupon system are set out in The Ontario Mining Act.

The third part of the department's operations covered under vote 1204, for the laboratories branch, is the operation of the Timiskaming Testing Laboratories at Cobalt. During the last four decades the TTL has provided an important service to the cobalt and silver mines of that historic old mining camp. In the laboratories, the ores are sampled and their mineral values are determined. After sampling and assaying, the ore or concentrate is shipped by the laboratories to smelters on behalf of the producer. We estimate that operating costs during the coming year will total $85,000, the same amount as was budgeted for the present year. The greater part of this sum will be returned to the Treasury in the form of fees for services paid by the mining companies.

The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act provides that an arbitrator be empowered to investigate all claims of damage due to fumes emanated by smelters and similar operations in the province. The arbitrator inspects and appraises the damage and, if possible, arranges to settle the matter without a formal hearing. Nearly all claims are settled in this manner, but he does have the power to arbitrate and assess damages. In the event that his finding is disputed by either party, the matter can be appealed to the Ontario Municipal Board.

This year the people of Ontario and The Department of Mines lost the services of a very great gentleman, its arbitrator, Mr. R. H. Murray, who retired in June after 37 years of faithful public service. Mr. Bruce R. Dreisinger has succeeded Mr. Murray as sulphur fumes arbitrator. Like Mr. Murray, he will maintain his headquarters in that great city of Sudbury.

The cost of operating this office, covered under vote 1205, is $30,000, just as in the present year.

The final item of ordinary expenditure is $353,000 for the mining lands branch, covered in vote 1206. This branch, numerically the largest in the department, administers The Mining Act insofar as it pertains to the disposition of Crown lands for mining purposes. The province is divided into 14 mining divisions for the purpose of handling the work related to the staking and recording of mining claims. Twelve mining recorders and their staffs are enabled to handle this work because the work of two divisions is handled from each of two of the division offices.

Mining claims inspectors are located at six points throughout the province. Their principal function is to assist the recorders and carry out inspections of mining claims as required. The mining lands branch is responsible for the collection of a large part of the revenue paid into the consolidated revenue fund by the department.

Mr. Chairman, I have covered all the ordinary expenditures which are foreseen by my department for the next fiscal year. There remains one item of capital expenditure to be dealt with.

Since the institution in 1951 of the mining and access roads programme, well over 500 miles of new roads, in 61 separate projects, have been built to open up large and potentially rich areas of our northland. No one who is conversant with the vast potential of this part of the province, and the crying need for easier and better communications, can question the great worth of the programme. In the decade that the programme has been in operation, the returns have been out of all proportion to the cost, not only in the form of enhanced mining activity, but also in the development of our forest resources, tourist and recreation facilities, and improved living conditions for the people residing in isolated areas.

The advantages have been still more widely spread since the institution in 1959 of the federal-provincial roads to resources programme through which the Canadian and Ontario governments share the cost of agreed projects designed to provide access to and development of whole regions in hitherto inaccessible parts of the province.

So far under this programme, five major projects have been undertaken. Two have been completed and the other three are well advanced toward completion. Altogether more than 300 miles is involved in the projects so far approved.

To carry on this important work in the coming year, Mr. Chairman, I am asking this House for a total of $1 million. Three-quarters of this—$750,000—will be matched by the Canadian government as its share of the roads to resources programme. The other $250,000 is earmarked for construction under our own government's mining and access roads programme.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to get my staff if the House wishes to carry on with the estimates as laid out.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, it being Monday and, in a sense, turning over a new leaf and starting a fresh week, there is no better way—if one wants to start off in a spirit of humanitarianism—than to follow the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) because, affable, pleasant and courteous fellow that he is, it is very difficult not only to get angry at him, but to become critical of him. And I observe, sir—if my opinion is shared by most of the hon. members of the House, as I am sure it is—I observe that we are not the only ones to think that about him. I was just recently noting in an editorial in the Northern Miner, which of course, is the voice of the mining industry, that as recently as January of this year they had this to say about the hon. Minister of Mines:

In his first appearance before a mining audience in his new capacity as Ontario's Minister of Mines, the hon. George C. Wardrope demonstrated that either he is a keen student of Dale Carnegie or else he has an innate ability to win friends and influence people. We incline toward the latter since his obvious sincerity is one of his most endearing qualities.

Now I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Mines has any relatives in high places in the Northern Miner, and I do not know whether he would consider it defamatory to be called a student of Dale Carnegie, but I submit that it sums up adequately the feelings of most of us—in fact, all of us—have about him.

Having said that, I would beg leave to say by way of generality that the chief complaints the Opposition could make about The Department of Mines is the fact that the department is so insignificant in the hierarchy of government. Without going through all the estimates, I venture to say that there is no department that has less money voted to it than the little over $3 million that this House is asked to vote for a department which produces a billion dollars of revenue, of real income, for the province, and in the words of the hon. Minister himself, "provides employment to 52,000 people directly engaged," and therefore sustenance and maintenance for all of those dependent upon those 52,000.

The hon. Minister sums it up—as his predecessor did in the debate last year—by saying that this figure would people a city about the size of Hamilton. Although I note—and I would never go so far as to say that the hon. Minister was not the architect of the words he used—but I noted that his predecessor in the office last year at page 575 of Hansard, said that the number of people directly involved in mining was 60,000. That figure has fallen 8,000, I take it, in the intervening year. However, we will not stop to argue about that.

I do say, sir, and I beg leave to repeat to you, that in the organization of government and in the creation of the hierarchy, I daresay The Department of Mines is viewed as something in the way of a poor relative. For proof of that fact one need go no farther than to make a comparison of the amount of money sought last year by this department and the amount of money that is sought this year. One will see that, in contradistinction and in direct opposition to all other departments of the government, where in each single case, I believe—subject to correction by someone who has made a closer study of it than I—in each case in the other departments they are asking for more money, and the amount of money either varies from a relatively small amount or, to listen to the hints of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts), in the field of education the amount they are going to ask for is going to be quite a dramatic increase over last year, and so in The Department of Municipal Affairs, notwithstanding the general trend in government, and the growth of the empires and the hierarchies, in the other departments, this department is seeking from the House $331,000 less than it asked for last year.

Apparently, that fits in with the general view of the role of the departments of those hon. members of the front bench who are of the Treasury board and, I daresay, the view of the rest of the hon. members in the first two rows, who comprise the executive council. Now, it might be appropriate, at this time, to pin down that decrease, and the decreases generally, to be sought or to be allowed to occur in the access and mining roads branch. There is somewhat less of a decrease in the appropriation of monies to the main office of the department.

The hon. Minister said that 90 per cent of the land area of this province is north of North Bay. I had always thought that it was 80 per cent, or four-fifths of the land area of Ontario was north and west of the French river—but we will not quarrel about that. He could be right, and if it is 90 per cent, then indeed the importance of that area is even more significant than I had previously thought. He numbered the access roads that had been built during the 10-year period since the programme was initiated. I think he said something in the neighbourhood of 500.

Well, in that vast area, sir, comprising the overwhelming percentage of the land area of the province, 500 roads would not make much of an impression. Just conjuring up in my mind's eye the situation in the immediate neighbourhood to the great industrial centre from which I come, I cannot think of any significant building during the past 10 years of mining, or for that matter any other type of access roads.

I have given myself occasion, sir, to complain in the House before, and in the presence of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) who unfortunately—oh yes, he is here, he has surrendered his seat, and I am delighted he is here. His department in league, I think, with The Department of Mines, saw fit to build the road from Chapleau to Foleyet to connect up with the road from Timmins to Foleyet which, by sheer coincidence—now mark you, Mr. Chairman, by sheer coincidence, Timmins being the home base of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests—that road was given a high degree of priority, and linked up Foleyet, as I say, and Chapleau.

We in the largest centre in northern Ontario, the greatest numbers of population concentrated in a relatively small area of the north, we who in moments of exuberance and high spiritedness, beg leave to refer to ourselves as the capital of the north—and we do not get a great deal of criticism or opposition for so referring to Sudbury—we have felt for a long time that one of the greatest priorities was the building of the road from Sudbury to Timmins.

However, at least, the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests has himself never felt in such a companionate frame of mind that I have ever heard him in this House, or for that matter anywhere else, endorse the early building of that road. I believe the first stimulus and request for the building of that road came in the year 1924, the year, incidentally, in which I first saw the light of day. Various groups of people, various organizations, ever since 1924, have made their pleas to the various governments of this province for the opening up of a highway artery from the one great urban centre to the other great urban centre.

Now, I can safely say the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), who was here a little earlier, but has now left the House—I can safely say from memory and without the very fastidious way in which the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) does by referring to newspaper clippings and other documentary evidence—I can remember with little effort, that the hon. member for Victoria, when he had imposed upon him the burden of leading this province, that at least on four occasions, perhaps more, while in Sudbury, he told the good people of Sudbury, he told the representatives of the press, he has told anyone else within earshot, that the building of that road from Sudbury to Timmins would commence very shortly.

I think that one time he even went so far as to stimulate the then Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) to put little amounts on the estimates for the conducting of a survey as to the route that would be taken. I know this, that every time the request has reached the point of being a bit inflammatory, from the point of crisis, the predecessor of the present hon. Prime Minister would always announce, right at the most effective and strategic moment, that “we have decided to build the road, and a start to the road will be made shortly.” That always got the headlines in the Sudbury Star.

It could be the forgetfulness that always attended that announcement had something to do with the loss of confidence that the people of Sudbury have not only demonstrated in the Conservative Party in this House, but have unswervingly demonstrated toward their fellow party members who now have control of the affairs of the nation as a whole at Ottawa.

However, as long as I am a member of this House, I shall, whenever opportunity is given to me, address the government and beg in reasonable and moderate fashion for the early start of construction of that road. I say this to sum it up. Sudbury has far more contacts with southern Ontario than it does with the great hinterland possessed of vast and unknown treasures; it has virtually no contact by way of highway artery with that vast area at all. Balanced entirely on an east-west access, we have Highway 17, which comes through from southeastern Ontario, proceeds west to Sault Ste. Marie, and beyond; we have the Trans-Canada Highway; we have highway connection with Parry Sound in the south. But to the north, and to the great hinterland, there are no highway arteries at all.

It always seems to me, and to everybody else in the Sudbury basin who thinks about it, that there is an impelling sense of urgency to do something about opening up that area to the north, linking the two major urban centres and inviting the expansion and investment of capital in that area in order to unlock the riches that abound therein.

Now, generally speaking, I plead on behalf of the building of one road. With respect to the building of access roads in northern Ontario, I say the sum of $1 million is a mere pittance and will go virtually nowhere in the exploration of the great area, or in the stimulating of people to go in there and invest their money. Many of my hon. colleagues, no doubt, will want to address some remarks, and probably of a more specific nature than that.

Mr. Chairman, consideration of access roads leads one to an examination of the whole problem of transportation so far as it relates to the mining industry in northern Ontario. We in the Liberal party—and in particular the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in this House—have addressed remarks to the effect that, short of persuading the present government to do it, when given the responsibility of office it will be part of our policy to subsidize transportation, if necessary, in any form, for the opening up of the great area of north and northwestern Ontario.

I mean no offence to the hon. Minister, and I am sure he will take none, when I recall that one night in the House when the hon. predecessor of the present hon. Prime Minister was absent for a space of time and this very matter was being debated—it was at the time or near the time I recall that the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) was presenting his brief to the Royal commission on transportation—the hon. leader of the Opposition advocated that in order to stimulate economic development and persuade industry, both primary natural resource industry and secondary industry to locate in northern and northwestern Ontario, he advocated that subsidies, if necessary, be given to the carriers.

Many hon. members will recall that the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) who at that time, of course, was Minister of Reform Institutions, got up and, in his very charming, ingratiating manner, argued with some vehemence—I recall well, he spoke like a man possessed of an ideal—and he advocated in stentorian tones that such a policy and such a programme was the very thing that northern and northwestern Ontario needed—subsidies to transportation.

Of course, he was right, and I recall that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) returned to the House just to hear the tail end of this and I do not think he actually heard any of the eloquence of the hon. Minister of Mines. I do not know whether anyone told him what he had said or not. I hope not, because he was a man known to be quite fierce on occasion about such things. But I remember the then hon. Prime Minister getting up and saying—in fact I do not think I exaggerate in saying, perhaps some of my hon. friends will corroborate me, that he pounded the table, he pounded his desk: “As long as I am responsible for the leadership of the government, there will be no form of subsidy for any form of transportation in this province.”

Hansard will record his words. He said: “As long as I am responsible there will be no subsidy to any form of transportation.”

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) has taken over now.

Mr. Sopha: As the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) says, he is gone now. He is gone but he is not forgotten. And there is a new regime, a new direction, a new group in control. The time might be ripe for them to reconsider such a dogmatic and entrenched position as the former leader of the government took with respect to subsidies because, certainly, as the hon. Minister of Mines knows from his very area, the people whom he knows well and personally, who are leaders of industry in that area, have very, very different ideas about the effect upon the stimulation and expansion of the mining industry of the high cost of freight rates in northwestern Ontario.

I see as recently as January 18, 1962, in a newspaper, known no doubt to the hon. Minister of Mines, and called the Atikokan Progress—it must be a Liberal paper to have a name like that, it must support the Liberal party—under the heading “Crippling to Iron Ore Movement” and the sub-heading “Raps Freight Rate Boost” there are these statements made and I will read them very briefly.

A 20 per cent increase in iron ore freight rates, imposed last year by the Canadian National Railways, could be crippling to the Steep Rock iron range, E. A. Hebditch, president of the Atikokan Chamber of Commerce, contended Thursday evening, January 11.

Mr. Hebditch, in his inaugural address at the monthly chamber meeting, noted that Atikokan is solely dependent on the iron ore industry in an economic sense "and this problem cannot be taken lightly by the chamber of commerce." He noted that the freight increase had been a factor in a decision by Caland Ore Company Limited to suspend underground operations.

Industry sources said that the 20 per cent increase, instituted last May, had resulted in a jump of 33 cents a ton in the cost of handling ore by the railway. The rate from Atikokan to the ore docks at Port Arthur had been $1.45 a ton with an additional 19 cents for dockage charges.

Mr. Hebditch said that Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited and Caland Ore are able now to ship from open pit mines, but would be faced with a problem when these reserves, capable of being mined much less expensively than by underground methods, are exhausted and the companies find it necessary to get their production from underground.

"We must be vocal and make our problem known," said Mr. Hebditch. "We cannot allow unfair freight rates to cripple our own economy."

That is the quote directly from him. Then, on another score:

Mr. Hebditch said that a road programme for the area must be pushed with vigour. It was imperative that the Atikokan-Fort Frances highway be finished as soon as possible and "we need more co-operation from the chambers around us."

Well, perhaps we will hear from the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden), the chairman of the committee on mining, on that score. But in better words than I can use, borrowing the words of Mr. Hebditch, the problem is articulated.

Another gentleman, well known to many hon. members of the House, and known to the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe), and a gentleman much respected is Mr. Neil Edmonstone, vice-president of Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited. Quoting from the same newspaper from an earlier edition there is this report:

Northwestern Ontario needs freight rates that will "make economic sense to this area" and which "will permit us to thrive and compete while permitting the railways to do the same," said Neil Edmonstone, vice-president of Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited, on Wednesday, March 22.

-1961, I might add.

As the keynote speaker at a dinner tendered by the Northwestern Ontario Development Association and the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce to Trade Minister Hees and a delegation of other members of Parliament, Mr. Edmonstone said that freight rates constitute this area's biggest problem. He added that power and roads follow close behind.

Well, the thought springs to mind that we on this side of the House have been known to be somewhat vocal in our criticism of the Ontario Northland Railway and for that I do not apologize. I feel that our criticisms have been justified and have been based upon our knowledge of the premises on which that railway serving the northeastern part of the province was founded and built. That railway of course was being pushed through in 1903 when the community which provided me my birthplace was found quite by accident, by one of the men who was working on the railway.

The idea of that railway, in its founding, was to provide a developmental and exploratory road, to the northeastern part of the province. Generally speaking, over the years since its founding, we at least on this side of the House feel that the attitude has been one of how much profit we can make from it. Those responsible for its administration and running it have quite lost sight of the original intention of its founders and have looked at the balance sheet as being the important assessment of what the railroad does for that part of the province, which it is supposed to serve.

Not only have its freight rate structures imposed a burden upon those in agriculture—because all of the supplies used in agriculture, such as imported nitrate fertilizer and the seed grains and imported cattle, shipping their products, all imposed a differential price, both in purchase and sale, over that which their competitors in the southern part of the province are forced to pay—but so it is also in the mining industry with regard to the shipment of ore concentrates, imported machinery and every other item that is necessary to have transported by a carrier.

I would not want to pass over examination or reference to the Ontario Northland Railway without making some mention of the announcements that have been forthcoming from the government about the development of iron ore properties in the Kirkland Lake area and expansion of railroad facilities by the Ontario Northland Railway. We, of course, to the extent that these announcements are realized in concrete form in the future, on this side of the House applaud and welcome those developments. I must ask this new administration to have a close look at that railroad in order to determine whether it is carrying out its functions from the point of view of being developmental rather than from the point of view of being purely a business venture.

The hon. Minister was speaking about the access roads. I want to say this: He talked about the vast potential of our part of the province. Of course, I might say this without seeming to be either a sneering sceptic or a cynic, that we in northern Ontario have heard that speech many times. We have heard visiting politicians—and they are usually politicians who do not reside in northern Ontario—who come into the north and usually make a speech about the vast potential of the great area. To this date that is just about what it is—the vast potential.

I remember the last time I heard the unequalled oratory and eloquence of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) when he visited us in June of last year upon the occasion of a testimonial dinner for the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle), a man who has served the area well and ably for a number of years. He, the former hon. Prime Minister, was the guest speaker at that banquet. It is one of the few times, I might add for the edification of my hon. colleagues, that I, as one of the Opposition, was recognized to the extent that they even allowed me to approach the head table. They did not just allow me to, they gave me a seat at it. Of course, it cost me five dollars—five dollars for my wife to go and partake in the festivities and the merriment and the enthusiasm attending the testimonium to the hon. member for Nickel Belt, my colleague. Maybe they will give me one.

In any event, the former hon. Prime Minister made the usual speech about the vast potential of the area. We are not so much interested—it is like Sir John A. Macdonald heard at one time about the speeches about the British connection a generation or two ago when the fashion was to make speeches about our British heritage, the common law and Rule, Britannia and that sort of thing. Through the passage of time, of course, opinions moderate to some extent and Sir John A. Macdonald said some time near the end of his life that it was about time they threw all those speeches in the waste basket and thought up a new theme. So it is with the speeches about the “vast potential.”

I do not often take the time of the House, Mr. Chairman, to refer to my own constituency, but where I do articulate some words about its nature I imagine that I could be very glowing in the tribute that I would pay to that great industrial centre. Sudbury is not the hinterland, it is a very civilized and advanced and developed community. It is populated by a young and vigorous population whose average age of population is six years below the national average.

In other words, to live and work in Sudbury you have to be a young man. It attracts young men because only young men can perform the very exacting labours that are required in moiling in the ground for the base metals that we produce. Certainly the community is a leader in at least two other important aspects, one of which is that it produces more metal for sale on the markets of this country and abroad than any other community in the country.

A great proportion—one never is able to find out, but I would venture to say that something approaching a third—of the mineral wealth of the province is produced in the Sudbury basin. The companies that carry on the business of mining there are of course unequalled anywhere in the world for the advanced state of their technology. Not only their technology of mining—and they have in many important respects shown great innovation and great inventiveness in the methods of mining—but also in the realm of safety. To work in a mine in Sudbury it has oftentimes been said that it is not so important how much mineral, how much ore is produced during the day as it is that the worker works safely in producing it.

I relate back, and I do not think I am unfair in going back to my earlier statement, that this department, in being voted a little over $3 million insofar as exercising any leadership in the technology of mining, the answer is it does not.

I daresay that it would be rare for any of the large mining companies of this province to approach The Department of Mines of the province to get advice or assistance on mining technology. On the contrary, I imagine the flow of information is the other way; that if The Department of Mines wants to know anything about mining it goes to the leaders in the mining industry and asks them how it is done, if they are willing to tell, and whether they are or not I could not possibly answer.

But my purpose is not to deprecate, my purpose is to plead. I plead in respect of an industry that produces $1 billion of income for the people of this province. I say with such an important industry—and that, after all, is one-sixth of the total production of the province, I think the gross national product of Ontario is about $6 billion; if the mining industry produces $1 billion of it then that is one-sixth of the total produced in that area itself—in such an important industry as that, I say this department should exhibit leadership in mining technology and research and be a fountain of advice for those smaller mines at least, which are not able to afford any research, with respect to the adoption of appropriate techniques for the extraction of ore from the ground. Looking over the estimates one can see that other than geological surveys, safety, assaying and some concern with sulphur fumes, that is about the limits of the scope of this department. I think it is about time, Mr. Chairman, that the government had another look at the department and made up its mind whether it should not occupy a more important slot in the hierarchy than it now does.

I wanted to say a word, sir, about Elliot Lake. I note in the state of the union message, if I may so characterize it, more properly called the economic statement of the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Macaulay), he had this to say:

The value of Ontario's mineral output in 1961 was estimated at $948 million. A decline from the previous year, when it stood at $983 million. Substantial gains were made by several minerals, particularly iron ore, nickel and zinc. As was to be expected, production of uranium, although still ranking second, experienced a considerable decrease from $212 million to $157 million.

In other words, the decline in the output of uranium was about $60 million.

Mr. Chairman, you will recall that much of the time of the House a year ago was devoted to a discussion of the special problems of Elliot Lake. Many were the pleas that emanated from this side of the House to the government to take strong and forceful action to do something about the situation there, and the threat to that very important and very highly developed community.

I would be among the first to admit that much of the mining community of Elliot Lake are quite beyond the purview of this government. I do not want to take the time of the House to review all the arguments that were made, but it is fair to reassert that we on this side of the House have felt that there was a strange lack of unity between the members of the executive council here and their counterparts in Ottawa, in view of the fact that there appeared to be no concerted action with respect to the alleviation of the problem at Elliot Lake.

In the interval, one recalls that it was discovered that a contract for the sale of some $225 million, I believe I am correct, worth of uranium was discovered to exist between the government of the United Kingdom and the government of Canada. I read in the press, and I get a copy of the Elliot Lake Standard, published weekly, sent to me in complimentary fashion by the publishers of that newspaper every week, and I take the opportunity to follow developments there.

It is interesting to note that since the decline of the community there has been a shuffle, a change of personnel of the board of trustees that runs that community and now one of the members of the board is a lawyer by the name of Jewell, who has not been in the community too long. He established a law practice there, I think, two or three years ago. It did not take him long to become president of the local Conservative association, and it was not long after he was president of the local Conservative association that he was appointed to the board of trustees and, apparently, if one follows the goings-on in that community from the newspaper, that if—

Mr. J. A. Fullerton (Algoma-Manitoulin): May I ask the hon. member a question? Did the hon. member charge them $100 this year for making a political football out of this, as he did last year?

Mr. Sopha: I did not charge them $100 for making a political football out of anything. I would be glad to do that for nothing.

I should not dwell too long, but I say that Elliot Lake, the situation on the council level, is such that if one is not a Conservative, then so far as the fellow Jewell is concerned you cannot get anything. I note that they even went into the high school board recently and fired the Liberals that had been serving on there for two or three years, and replaced them with Conservatives.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is incumbent upon the government to look into this matter of the contract which is alleged to exist between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom because, so far as I am aware up to this time, none of the benefits of that contract have been, in any way, reflected in an increase of production in Elliot Lake. In other words, the increased production necessary to fulfill that $225 million contract in Elliot Lake has not been allocated to any of the producing mines there at all. The same grim prospect remains as existed at this time last year, that with the completion of the present contracts the community is still in danger of becoming what we know in the north as a ghost-town.

One other matter on which I would like to plead, with the kind indulgence of the House before I resume my seat, is in reference to a smelter at Cobalt. Now when I speak of Cobalt, I speak of an area of which the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and I are well acquainted. That is the only thing the hon. Attorney-General and I have in common, I think, and that is that we both have an association with Cobalt. I can recall, but I would not want to put a date on it, that so far as the smelting and refining of ores from Cobalt was concerned, as far back as I can remember, the ores were always shipped to Deloro. I do not know when that started, but I imagine that it was perhaps in the first two decades of the present century, Deloro being a community not far from Marmora in the county of Hastings. All of the finishing off of the concentrates, at least, was done at the smelter at Deloro.

I think it was two years ago, it might have been a little longer than that, that the refinery and smelter at Deloro closed down. It was certainly very recent and I recall that some time around the beginning of the second world war—or it might have been during that time, it might have been shortly after, I was away from my home town during those years, but I think it was during the second world war—the first efforts were made for the establishment of a smelter and refinery at Gillies, a little community about eight miles south of Cobalt. In the intervening years I remember that various groups—I would not want to run the risk of putting a name on the first one that started that smelter, I think I remember it but I will not bother to state it—but I do know that various groups in the intervening years have come along and made ineffectual efforts to resuscitate the smelter project at Gillies. They have never been attended with any success and, so far as I am aware, that plant still lies idle, as it has always been.

In the result, the producers in the Cobalt area have been forced to send their ores to the United States. Now that is an interesting matter in itself, because in connection with sending ores for refining to the United States many hon. members of the House will not know the details of some of the struggles we have had in this country to get the refining of ores established in Canada. In respect of nickel ores, I think it was from 1890 to 1918 or so that the struggle went on between governments and producers until finally the major nickel company established its first refining plant at Port Colborne, whereas previously ores had been taken outside of Canada and had been refined in Ohio, I believe.

It is important for the economy of our country, and for the provision of jobs, of course, that as much of the mining process and refining as possible be done in Canada.

So, to go back to where I began, since the closing down of the Deloro smelter the producers in Cobalt have been forced to ship their ores abroad to the United States to have them smelted and refined.

Now, I earlier intimated to the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that futile attempts had been made, attempts that resulted in failure, to establish this smelter near Cobalt, and they had all failed. My plea to the hon. Minister, and on which I make my conclusion, is that in respect of this development and in respect of this plant that now exists, that every effort ought to be made by his department and—in fact ought to be made by the government, ought to be made by the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay), who has exhibited such a recent and keen interest in the development of northern Ontario—to see what can be done by way of subsidization or encouragement of the people who own this plant at Cobalt, in an effort to see whether it cannot be opened or cannot be used for the treatment, the final treatment, of the ores that are produced in that area.

I hope the hon. Minister will lend a sympathetic ear to both my words, and, for that matter, the words of the editors of the Northern Miner. I shall not bother to quote their editorial in support of that position or in making that suggestion to the government today. I wish to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the kindness which you and the other hon. members of the House have demonstrated to me in listening to my few remarks.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin where the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) began and concluded, with regard to this editorial in the Northern Miner which referred in such laudatory terms to the hon. Minister as being either a keen student of Dale Carnegie, or else he had an innate ability to win friends and influence people. We all know the hon. Minister well and we know that the latter undoubtedly is the case. He has this innate ability to win friends and influence people.

However, Mr. Chairman, I was rather interested that the hon. member for Sudbury dropped the quotation from the editorial at that point, because as hon. members know there is an old adage in the English language that: "Flattery will get you nowhere." There is no doubt in the wide world as to what this flattery had as its immediate objective—when the writers of the Northern Miner were "pouring it on." Because they immediately proceeded to propose that the government should provide a subsidy to the present owner of a refinery in this Cobalt area. They even went further and suggested that maybe this was an occasion on which the government should cast free enterprise aside; step in and establish the refinery itself.

Now, the hon. member for Sudbury came back to this point. I want to come back to it immediately and see if we cannot tidy it up.

During a certain by-election a year or so ago up in the Timiskaming area, the predecessor of the hon. Minister of Mines, who was flanked by his deputy Minister and two or three other officials, visited the area and there were numerous well-staged announcements with regard to efforts emanating from the TTL to meet the need for a refinery in the area. Now, as so often happens, there is a great deal of a build-up in publicity in the by-election and the issue dies afterwards. I am a bit curious to find out from the hon. Minister of Mines where that project rests.

However, I want to add a word of caution—if I can be of influence with the hon. Minister—just a word of caution to not necessarily heed the last bit of advice from the hon. member for Sudbury. Because the situation here—I am informed, and I am certain that I am informed reliably—is that the man who now owns the present refinery and who has it over-capitalized to a point away beyond its real value, might well be interested in the proposition of the government stepping in and taking it over for perhaps a million dollars. Then he would make a few more fast bucks—he has quite a reputation of having made many of them throughout his lifetime.

So on the other hand I agree with the hon. member for Sudbury that here is a place where the government should step in. I think they should follow through on some of the promises of that by-election and use the TTL, with its very high reputation in the community, as the operative centre for establishing a refinery in the area.

But I would repeat my caution, that I do not think the answer to the problem is to buy out at the highly over-capitalized figure the present establishment owned by one of the operators in the area. My information is that one of the problems at the moment is that the rest of the mining industry would have no confidence in a refinery if it were to be operated by the man who has this over-capitalized venture at the moment.

I spell this out, with the request that the hon. Minister should speak to this, because in his inimitably affable fashion there were a number of things he skated around in his introduction to his estimates. I submit that this is one item that he should deal with and perhaps after I sit down.

I want to devote, rather briefly, Mr. Chairman, my introductory remarks on the estimates to this whole question of revenues in the mining industry. I would not bother re-threshing a lot of old straws—maybe a rather inappropriate metaphor to use in dealing with mining—if it were not for the fact there have been some most interesting developments in the last year, that I think make it useful to review this whole situation.

For example, I was very interested, in looking through the figures that became available from the budget statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), to discover that in the past year, despite the fact that we are producing something approaching a billion dollars in wealth from our mines, that once again the amount of money we got in resources revenues from the mining industry was approximately $13.5 million. I will not labour the point that we have made so often, that this is a shockingly low figure as a rental for resources that belong to the people of Ontario and upon which the mining industry is built.

Another question that I would like to ask the hon. Minister, when he deals later with the range of questions that have been put to him, is what is the explanation for the fact that in the coming year the estimates indicate that The Department of Mines expects to receive some $21 million, in excess of $21 million, in revenue from the mining industry. Now, I am not aware, on one hand, of any increase in mining royalties; I am not aware, on the other hand, of any expected startling increase in production in the mining industry. Therefore, I am quite frankly puzzled as to why there would be a jump of some 50 per cent or better between the receipts this past year from the resources, the mining tax, and what the government expects to receive in the coming year. I would appreciate it if the hon. Minister would give some explanation on that.

However, quite apart from what the explanation for that is, let me proceed to consider this whole problem of the fair level of revenue to be raised from the mining industry. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I think it is well for us to recall that the mining industry is the recipient of quite a range of assistance and subsidies from governments, both at the provincial and federal level. As the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) has pointed out, there are access roads which are built specifically to meet the needs of the mining industry; there is assistance for the construction of new mines; there is a three-year exemption from corporation tax and, if we come back to the provincial field, there is a total exemption from municipal tax. In lieu of that there is a special tax on the profits of the mines, and from this the government returns grants to the mining communities in lieu of the revenues they would have received as a municipal tax.

The grossly unfair aspect of this tax, Mr. Chairman, it has always seemed to me, is that whether or not these mines make a profit, they seek and receive services from the local municipalities. But if they do not make a profit they do not pay any tax and therefore the mining community has to spread out the cost of these services to the mines over the rest of the community. Now this is the kind of favoured position that no other industry in northern Ontario, or anywhere else, receives.

The forest industry, for example, is not in that happy position of being exempt from municipal tax and being able to escape any tax in lieu of it, if perchance they do not happen to make profits in any year. Likewise, I think it is wise for us to recall that any small business in the mining community, in fact any business in the mining community, if it has a tough year and does not make any profit, does not escape its share of the cost of municipal services in the community. And yet the mining company does because it does not pay the municipal tax; and if perchance it does not make a profit, it does not pay any tax to the government, so the grants in lieu back to the mining communities are reduced.

I am a little intrigued as to why the hon. member for Sudbury—who has already left his seat—coming from a mining community, would not have reiterated what is undoubtedly one of the valid and continuing complaints of the mining communities, namely, the fact that they are not getting this municipal tax and not getting a fair grant in lieu of it from the government. But he was silent on that particular issue.

We have for some time in the CCF, and in the New Democratic Party, been claiming that there should be an increase in mining revenues from the resources tax. I do not need to repeat that claim now but I must say that I was rather intrigued to discover support for it—even if not in specifically the manner that we have indicated but at least general support of our plea that more revenues come from the mining industry—from no less a person than the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) who I do not think is in the House with us today.

I would like to draw to the House's attention that, on January 13 of this year, in the Sudbury Star—again I was rather intrigued that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) did not support the hon. member for Nickel Belt on this—is he trying to play a sort of cosy game with the mining companies or what?

An hon. member: He was busy in the by-elections—away from home.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he undoubtedly would have become aware of this because I am sure he has at least a few other people in his organization who would have drawn it to his attention afterwards. However, let me proceed—

THE MPP SEEKS NEW MINING TAX LEGISLATURE WILL HEAR A RECOMMENDATION

are the headlines in the Sudbury Star. Interestingly enough this session has now gone on for three months, from December to March, and we still have not heard that recommendation from the hon. member for Nickel Belt. Maybe he has been persuaded to present it in the secrecy of the Tory caucus where it got solidly batted down. Perhaps I can present it on his behalf to the Legislature at the present time. I will have to—

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): He'll appreciate that.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sure he will appreciate it, yes. I will have to rely on the report in the Sudbury Star. Let me quote, Mr. Chairman, from that report of January 13:

A three to five per cent profit tax on all mining companies to finance northern road construction was urged today by Rheal Belisle, MPP for Nickel Belt. He said this was not new taxation, in effect, but equalizing of assessment refuting the special assistance given in mines.

I am a little bit puzzled by that word "refuting"—I imagine it means balancing off what is special assistance that is given to the mines in various forms—as I have already outlined.

Speaking at a luncheon meeting of the Ontario land surveyors of the northeastern region at Memorial Hall, Belisle said he would make his recommendation to the Ontario Legislature at the next session—

And then there is a direct quote from then, Mr. Chairman.

"If we are to continue, and we must continue to build better and new highways, we must have more revenue," said Belisle. "It is only with new roads that northern Ontario will develop and attract other industries and will continue to develop the province as a whole. We need the Sudbury-Timmins highway, the Sudbury-Chapleau road, and we need them now. It is my contention that a 3 to 5 per cent profit should be charged to all mining who are, of course, making profits. I do not think additional sales tax or corporation tax is the answer. If the corporation tax were increased many corporations would have to close their doors or curtail their operations and with the present employment situation we certainly do not want that."

He added that the auto licence fees were high enough. Belisle said that the province contends that it is not getting as much out of northern Ontario as it is putting in. "This is one way to do it," said Belisle. He pointed out that the mining firms were getting government assistance in the way of assistance on access roads, construction to new mines and three tax-free years for each new mine. He said the tax applicable to new highway construction would give the mining industry a better chance to develop other mines. He added that 95 per cent of the materials and cars which use these roads are provided by the mining industry.

And then if I may interject for a moment, Mr. Chairman, he made a statement which is a direct steal from so many speeches of the New Democratic Party that I am a little surprised that he did not credit it to us. This is his final paragraph:

He remarked that one mining company recently reported a profit of $105 million after taxes last year. "I say that 3 or 5 per cent tax on their profits would still leave a great amount for distribution among their shareholders," he argued.

That is the end of the quotation from the Sudbury Star.

Mr. Chairman, I wish the hon. member were here. In fact, on second thoughts, I am not really surprised that he is not here.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): He is in the woodshed.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, perhaps he is in the woodshed, in the political woodshed. But having made this plea, I just want to back it up. For the moment I am not going to particularly hang my case on an increase in the resources tax on the mining industry. One reason why we in the New Democratic Party feel that this is the most equitable way to raise more revenue is that the resources tax becomes a cost as far as the industry is concerned and therefore they can write it off when they calculate their corporation tax at the federal level. Therefore they get 50 per cent of a return, so to speak, or a credit on it, because the corporation tax is approximately 50 per cent.

When I emphasized this point in the House two or three years ago I remember that the hon. leader of the Opposition disputed it, and the hon. Provincial Treasurer acknowledged that this is the case—resources taxes on the mining industry are regarded as a cost and they can be deducted as a cost when calculating their corporation taxes. So it would seem to me, assuming that the industry is willing to acknowledge that more revenue should be raised from them, that this is the most equitable way of raising it. And this is what we have been pleading for for years.

However, Mr. Chairman, I am not particularly interested in the means. I am raising this once again because as the hon. member for Nickel Belt has pointed out, there is obviously a gross inequity in a situation in which, as the hon. member for Sudbury has pointed out, we have a desperate need for more roads. And if the hon. member for Nickel Belt is correct, that the government is putting more money into the north than it is getting out—I do not know whether this is true or not, but I repeat his words—if it is true then the case is all the more conclusive for the justice and fairness of this government raising more revenue from the mining industry.

And when you have it finally and conclusively underlined by the fact that here is one industry that last year had $105 million in profits after taxes, surely it is an equitable proposition that this government should, through resources taxes or special profit tax or some other way, raise more revenue. And incidentally, if I may just pause here for a moment, this is the simple point that we were trying to make in the by-election that apparently Senator Taylor talked about down in Waterford when he argued that we were going to be hurting some of the widows and children who were getting their dividends from the company.

Mr. Sopha: The company is going to invest $75 million in capital expansion in the next 5 years. Now where are they going to get the money if we take it from them?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member wants to interrupt me with a statement like that, he had better get somebody who is a little wet behind the ears—

An hon. member: Well, he has somebody.

Mr. MacDonald: He has not. The interesting thing in this connection—and I do not want to go too far off because this really is not in the mining estimates—is that we have heard a lot in the last two or three years about International Nickel and the amount of money they have invested in northern Ontario.

In fact, it is $180 million. And here are our red-blooded, hairy-chested, free-enterprisers who are developing a nation. The fact of the matter is that the tax structure of this nation has permitted this company to accumulate somewhere $250 million and $300 million of undistributed reserves in profits.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Invested in plant, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh no, no sir. They have reserves of between $250 million and $300 million, so that the new development in northern Manitoba can be paid for completely “out of the sock,” so to speak.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Why not?

Mr. MacDonald: “Why not?” the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) asks. You know, there used to be a day that, when a company was going to develop they would maybe have 25 per cent of their requirements and then would go to the capital markets to get the money to do it. They would mortgage their future and they would pay it off. But we have had a tax structure that has been so favourable that they have now accumulated amounts to the point where they do not have to go to the capital market.

It is this very point that has led Eric Kierans—and I want to come back to this, perhaps, in my budget speech a little later because I think it is a very interesting one—to muse on the rather interesting situation that we have reached in a capitalistic economy which does not need any more capitalists—because they do not have to go to the money market to get the necessary finances to develop; they have accumulated it through the internally generated reserves.

So, to come back to what you have in the instance of the International Nickel Company—and it is a classic case in our modern economy—they have been permitted such profits that they have all their investment requirements without having to borrow a single red cent. They have accumulated all this because of our tax structure.

Now I repeat, Mr. Chairman, just before I leave this point, that obviously anybody who is interested in the future development of northern Ontario and the economy of Ontario, would be foolish to want to place an unfair burden on any industry, including the mining industry. But it strikes me that the case is a conclusive one, particularly in some of the giants of the mining industry—and International Nickel leads in that category—that there is a conclusive case for raising more of the revenues, and I gladly join the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) in saying that this government should raise some more revenue. If he is interested in getting these roads, I wish I could get the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) to join too. Perhaps, with some working within the Tory caucus and a united opposition on this side of the House we could get the government to move forward to this.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. member will never recruit me. He tried that in Kenora and it did not work. They did not buy that in Kenora.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I just want to recapitulate before I sit down, because there are a number of questions that I have asked the hon. Minister, and one or two more that I want to add.

First, I would like this up-to-date story on the refinery in Cobalt. If I could capture the hon. Minister's ear again, I would say that there are a number of questions I would like to put to him. I would like his up-to-date story on the refinery and what, if anything, the government plans to do in Cobalt.

Secondly, I would like his explanation why the revenues from the mining royalties are going to jump some 50 per cent in the coming year when, as far as I know, there has been no increase in the rate, and there is nothing like that kind of increase expected in mining production. I would like also to have him explain why—and here I do join forces with the hon. member for Sudbury—why, since the federal government is willing to meet 50 per cent of the cost of access roads, and we concede that there is a great need for the development of access roads—why the government is not stepping up its programme. I do not need to spell out in any detail that roads are the development behind which comes all other kinds of economic development throughout northern Ontario.

The final point that I wanted to raise with the hon. Minister is with specific reference to research in his department in two phases of it, relating directly to the uranium industry. Two or three years ago, I commented in this House on the initial reports that had come down on studies that this department initiated with regard to the dangers from radioactivity in the uranium industry, as far as the workers themselves were concerned. I am not going to repeat some of the quotations that I put on the record that time, I am sure the hon. Minister and his officials from the department are extremely familiar with them. But some of them suggested a very serious danger, particularly in the accumulation of this radioactive force with the workers.

Now, some three or four years have gone by since that report first came down, if I recall correctly—at least two or three years anyway—and I am wondering whether the department in its continuing studies has a further report to make as to whether or not they have concluded that there is no serious danger to the workers, or whether if there is a danger that there are counter-measures that can be taken.

The second research point in relation to the industry, that I am rather intrigued the hon. Minister did not touch upon at all, is the civilian use of uranium. It has been my belief—a belief I have expressed in this House in the past—that for quite some time those who were interested in the development of the uranium industry, placed all their hopes in the use of uranium for the development of atomic power.

Now this was an illusion that has been long since dispelled, because the amount of uranium needed for the development of all the atomic power for which we can foresee the need and the use in Canada is very, very small. A few hundred pounds will produce fantastic amounts of power. And therefore my conclusion is that the future of the uranium industry, like the future of the nickel industry after the first world war, depends almost completely on the development of a civilian market.

Now, the nickel industry after the first world war rescued itself from being something of a white elephant as it had been developed to meet war needs and had a productive capacity far beyond the civilian market capacity. It rescued itself from that position by a crash research programme, most of which was initiated by the industry itself. The result is, of course, today we find nickel used in almost every conceivable kind of product on the civilian front.

If the solution to the problems of the uranium industry rests in somewhat the same direction, I am wondering what effort the government is making, in conjunction with the industry, to step up the research so that we can get a quicker use of greater amounts of uranium.

Just to recall to the memory of hon. members of the House, Mr. Chairman, you will recall that it was pointed out a year or so ago that, if the automobile industry alone were to use uranium as an additive to steel for an alloy which would have great anticorrosive qualities, this would absorb something like 13,000 tons of uranium a year when our peak production in Canada was in the range of 15 to 16 thousand tons a year. In other words, the one industry—if uranium were used to add to steel for a new alloy—would absorb most of the productive capacity back at our peak period of 1959 and 1960.

I have read reports of this kind of development emerging. I would appreciate it if the hon. Minister would indicate to the House what the latest information is, as far as his department is concerned, on the prospect of the civilian use of uranium either in the automobile industry or in wider fields.

Mr. L. Quilty (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, I have asked for a special privilege from the hon. Chairman. While we are discussing The Department of Mines I, the newly elected member for Renfrew South, would like to tell the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe) that we in Renfrew South appreciate his tribute to the late Minister of Mines, James A. Maloney; and I wish the new hon. Minister, on behalf of all the people of Renfrew South, the best of everything in his new portfolio. Many of us disagreed with Jim politically but I would say that everyone liked him. Mr. Chairman, the hon. members of this House knew Jim, as I did, to be a rugged forceful man, some of them knew it probably better than I do. Well, we have his rugged type of individual in our area. I would also say we have other natural resources.

I have enjoyed the hon. Minister's eloquent statement regarding our natural resources, and I would like, Mr. Chairman, to inform the House that we have in Renfrew South the newly selected Miss Outdoor Girl of Canada, in the person of Miss Isobel Gould, a native of the town of Renfrew.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, before the estimates of the department are discussed, I would like to make one or two remarks in regard to Elliot Lake.

The other week when the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) was speaking in the Throne speech debate, during the course of his remarks I made the interjection, "What about Elliot Lake?" The hon. Minister told me that everything was fine in Elliot Lake. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure it is. Everything is fine in Elliot Lake for a few. Twelve months ago last November I listened to an address by the hon. Robert Winters. He was speaking on the unemployment situation in Elliot Lake and the Blind River area, and he assured his audience that they would come out on top in Elliot Lake. However, Mr. Chairman, an examination of the facts, I think, provides the truth of the situation.

There were some people, Mr. Chairman, who literally lost their shirts in Elliot Lake.

I know one individual who invested $350 in CanMet Mines, and when the spoils were shared out by Rio Tinto and by Dennison, this particular individual for the investment in 200 shares of CanMet got one share of Dennison worth around $10. Many, as I say, have lost their shirts and many hard-working miners in the Elliot Lake area have lost their homes. But it is assuring, Mr. Chairman, to know that Rio Tinto and Dennison shareholders will garner all the profit and come out on top.

The hon. Robert Winters was the Minister of Public Works in the Liberal administration and a colleague of Lester Pearson up to the time of his defeat in 1957.

Mr. Sopha: Who was defeated in 1957, Pearson?

Mr. Thomas: No, Winters. Then some two or three months after, he became the president of Rio Tinto Mines. Not surprising, I suppose. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to read an extract from the Toronto Daily Star of March 24, 1961, and I quote:

The federal government and the Liberal Party have a lot of explaining to do on why a $200 million uranium contract with Britain, signed early in 1957, has not been made public until this month.

Since late in 1959, when the United States and Britain announced they would not be taking up options to enter into further purchase contracts, the uranium industry and many miners and others dependent on it for a livelihood, have undergone great hardship. Mines have closed down; large areas of uranium communities, like Elliot Lake, have become deserted as the jobless moved on.

All this time, there existed this contract with Britain for 24 million pounds to be delivered in four equal instalments in the years 1963 to 1966.

Why were the terms of the 1957 contract not made public earlier? The contract was signed on March 29, 1957, some 10 weeks before the defeat of the former Liberal government. It was, therefore, known to the Liberals. Why in particular, has Liberal Leader Pearson, whose riding takes in Elliot Lake, not brought it into the open?

Robert Winters, now president of Rio Tinto Mining Company, was Public Works Minister in the Liberal government. Why did he remain silent while his company gobbled up a number of the small producers who might have benefited from the contract?

The contract was made by Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd., a Crown corporation. Its president, W. M. Gilchrist, gives a curious explanation for the secrecy.

He says Eldorado didn't want to encourage those mines which were doing well in the 1950's, but which were not necessarily economic producers. Eldorado thought it advisable to reduce the number of producers.

It was obvious that the boom of the 1950's gave rise to some inefficient operations and that there would have to be a shake-out eventually. Eldorado's strategy—for which the government must take responsibility—was to hasten it by withholding the facts about the British contract.

The government told communities like Elliot Lake it was doing everything it could to help them. What it was not doing, however, was using this big contract to make the inevitable transition in the industry as orderly as possible, causing the least possible human hardship. Instead the Ottawa attitude was to let the devil take the hindmost, so that the contract would go to the rest.

[One of the rest, it should be noted, is Eldorado itself. It is a producer, as well as a refiner and uranium trading agency.]

There has been ineptitude at the very least. The Commons special research committee, where details of the contract finally came out recently, must dig more deeply into this. And no further time should be lost in bringing the contract to bear on the difficulties of uranium towns like Elliot Lake.

Now, sir, it seems inconceivable that a Cabinet Minister of the Liberal administration did not know what was going on in his own riding. I can understand if he had been a member of the Opposition. A member of the Opposition quite well knows that there are times when things happen in his particular riding that he did not know anything at all about because it has been government inspired. But the leader of the Liberal Party, the hon. Lester Pearson, was the member for this particular riding. Surely he did know of the contract that existed between the federal government and Great Britain. I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that in the coming election, when it does come, that the good intelligent people of Algoma will give a great deal of thought to these facts.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, with respect to the problem just raised, it may be that an unnecessary amount of time should not be taken here but on another occasion—

Mr. Thomas: Why not?

Mr. Wintermeyer: If the hon. member does not object, then I will be very glad to carry on.

I can only add, Mr. Chairman, what I recall, and I am subject certainly to the exigencies of memory. My recollection is that Mr. Pearson made a statement in this respect. I think he pointed out the contract was executed not 10 weeks, if I recall, but 10 days before the day in 1957 to which references have been made.

Secondly, he specifically, as I recall, said that he did not know.

I think we have to take this man's word for it. This statement was made a year ago and to suggest now, a year later, that he was not telling the truth when he made that statement I think is a reflection on a distinguished man in Canada and should not be made in this House, unless something new is known or added to what has been said heretofore.

This matter was thoroughly discussed a year ago, and I think to the satisfaction of almost everyone. An adequate explanation was made and I know of no changes in the interval which would prompt the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) to bring this matter to the attention of this House at this time.

Mr. MacDonald: The agreement was made in Bermuda and he was at the conference.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, I think that in northwestern Ontario one of the most important industries we have to develop is our iron ore industry. Unfortunately, at the present time we find that this industry is very much in the doldrums, regardless of what anyone can say at the moment at least. Back on October 13, 1960, the former Prime Minister, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), when he was in northwestern Ontario addressing the northwestern Ontario Municipal Association, said this:

Iron ore purchased, valued at $25.3 million last year is almost twice the region's 1958 output and 15 times more than the total 15 years ago.

Now this may be so, but the mining industry in northwestern Ontario has found that it has been depleted. It has reached the point where if the markets are not available, we find that costs, expenses over which the mining company has not too much control, are forcing the mining companies to contract. The amount of iron ore which will be sent to the head of the lakes is being depleted. Because of difficulties in open-pit mining, the people are trying to open up the Lake St. Joseph area. I would like to repeat to the House a short paragraph which one of the high officials of the Steep Rock Iron Mines Company has written in a letter. He says:

A further development in the Lake St. Joseph area could be in prospect if rail rates and other similar situations were favourable. Involved would be an expenditure of $100 million plus a town for at least 3,000 people; a 68-mile branch rail line; a $40,000 hydro installation; new ships, docks, etc.; a new payroll would be created for 1,000 men, in turn creating employment and subsidiary industry for 5,000 to 8,000 additional persons.

As we all know, in northwestern Ontario, our greatest chance of putting men to work, of creating jobs, is to develop the mining industry. I myself spent 10 years in the town of Geraldton, which was originally developed by a gold strike in 1934. I was one of the ones there. There was a great deal of enthusiasm with these mines coming into operation and production. Strikes were made on many properties, many properties which are today ghost towns. In that particular part of the country there is only one mining property left which is in production.

This is a very unfortunate development. Here we have people, politicians, telling us that in our part of the country there are unlimited mining deposits and when it comes to developing these products then we do not have the amount of money necessary to develop these areas. Gold itself, of course, goes right back to the basic problem of low grade ores which cannot be developed because of the fact that the cost of labour, the cost of putting the operation into force and also the fact that the price of gold is at a figure at which it is almost impossible to operate.

Of course, there are many mines in operation right now up in the Red Lake area and in many areas in northwestern Ontario, but these are operations where the mining veins are sufficiently rich to make the operation a profitable venture.

Our big problem with mining is not so much the fact of trying to find the mines. The problem is trying to operate the mines in such a manner that we can put people to work; this is the thing that we are interested in. How are we going to employ people in northwestern Ontario, or northern Ontario, if we cannot have these mines operating? We cannot fill the area with people unless we find jobs for them in order to keep them employed.

I think that the main function of this government is to assist. As far as I am concerned, there are many ways in which we can assist; and I believe that if these ways and means of assistance can be looked into and developed, instead of taking a mining company and saying: "Here, we are going to throw more costs on you," as the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has indicated is the thing that should be done, I think ways and means must be found to keep the mines in operation so that we can get the revenues in sufficient quantity to pay for costs of material and machinery and underground explorations that are needed to develop a mine and make it worth while. At Hardrock goldmines in Geraldton, they had to put $1 million underground before they got a nickel from this particular mine. This means that the whole operation is terrifically costly, and if the price of one's product is not sufficient to make the investment worthwhile, there is no earthly use of the investment being made in the first place because loss is the only thing that is definite as far as the final result is concerned.

Votes 1201 to 1206, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 1207:

Mr. R. W. Gibson (Kenora): Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat taken aback by the rather rapid pace of events on this particular set of estimates. I should like to say something under the heading of "Construction of Mining and Access Roads."

I am, as you know, one of the new members and had the good fortune to be involved in a rather interesting election campaign. The first indication of what was to come took place on the day of the Conservative nomination convention in Kenora. Now on the day that convention was held we had a front page headline in the Kenora daily paper indicating that the mining access road to the Werner-Gordon Lake area would be built immediately.

Mr. Sopha: I remember it well.

Mr. Gibson: Since that time my hon. colleague in the federal House, who is also a Liberal-Labour member, has made inquiries in that house of Mr. Dinsdale, Minister of Northern Affairs, and I am advised that Mr. Dinsdale has indicated to this government that the federal government considers this as one of the projects falling under the "Roads to Resources" programme. Just recently, in this House, I asked the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) what the status of this road was, and I have received the courtesy of an answer to the effect that the matter was under consideration; in spite of the fact that this was a headline, as I have said, in the Kenora daily paper.

One other thing, while I am on the subject. We have in our area another mining centre at Pickle Lake. To this centre we have no means of road access in spite of numerous other election promises by hon. members of this government. I suggest to this House that something should be done in our area, other than giving us promises every four years. The hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope), who claims to represent northwestern Ontario, knows full well of what I am speaking, and I suggest to him: let us cut out this nonsense of promises, and produce facts.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer that. I wonder if the new hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) thinks that some $50 million spent up there is fooling around? The promise was made during the last by-election about the Werner Lake road, and I think the hon. member knows, if he will ask people up there, that the survey gangs have been there ever since that promise was made—getting the alignment of this road, figuring out what it is going to cost for bridge structures and other things. I am very surprised to hear him talking this way. That road is under way; it is one of the many projects that have been built in northwestern Ontario by the mining and access roads committee of this government.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, in the first instance, if such was the case why did not the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) indicate that to me the other day; rather than give me an evasive answer which was, to say the least, insulting—just as insulting to me as these promises were to the intelligence of our voters in the Kenora district by-election?

Let me add two more things if I may. You will note that the last year's estimates for mining and access roads was $1,550,000; this year these are $1 million. Now there is an indication right there—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gibson: I have the floor; if I may be permitted to continue.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Gibson: Now, looking at the estimates of The Department of Highways, we find the same situation applies.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: This is Mines the hon. member is talking about; we cannot—

Mr. Gibson: I just want to draw an analogy—looking at the estimates for The Department of Highways the same reduction of monies for northwestern Ontario is found. That is what this government has to offer northwestern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We cannot put one road on top of another.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1207 agreed to?

Mr. Sopha: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. Does the hon. Minister wish to say something? I want to add a word.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, that is quite all right.

Mr. MacDonald: Did the hon. member throw him off stride or did he have something to contribute? Why does the hon. Minister not answer the questions that were asked?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, when the hon. member speaks, it is quite all right with me; they are all passed but one estimate. I do not want to burden the House.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, in the fashion of the man we do not see so much, just to pour a little oil on troubled waters here. This will please Mr. Reguly, who I notice is not in his seat today, who chasteneth us over the week-end.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a comment about the hon. member for York South's solution to the rather startling headline that he referred to in the Sudbury Star in reference to the hon. member for Nickel Belt's speech at Sudbury about additional taxation of mining companies for the building of access roads. I, of course, read that, sir, at the time that it was made and I must say that I was rather surprised by it.

I am not going to launch into any criticism of my esteemed colleague from the Nickel Belt, about it today but I just wanted to point out—especially to the hon. member for York South, Mr. Chairman—that when one begins to speak about taxing mining companies in order to pay for anything, whether it be access roads or any other form of special taxation, that, so far as northern Ontario is concerned you are talking about eight or nine companies.

If you start to talk about taxing their profits, starting from the north, the companies that make a profit, after you deal with Dome, McIntyre, Hollinger, INCO and Falconbridge, GECO, Steep Rock—and that is just about all of them so far as the great bulk of mining activity in northern Ontario is concerned—the greatest number of mines do not make a profit at all. On the contrary, they are subsidized in their production by payments from the federal government.

Mr. MacDonald: Why not start with these then?

Mr. Sopha: I just want to put this thing in its proper perspective. When you talk about taxing mining companies you are talking about a very special, peculiar section of the industry. I venture to say that more people are employed in mines in northern Ontario that do not make a profit, than are employed in mines that do. But I have no figures to verify that one way or the other but I just want to—for the purposes of the record if nothing else—to say that any form of special taxation in relation to the building of access roads is not, in the first instance, the responsibility of the mining company, but it is the responsibility of this government, this department and The Department of Highways, The Department of Lands and Forests.

There is just one additional thing I want to mention. Every year we hear this speech from the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), and if he does not make the speech then the speech is parroted by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), about taxing these resources industries. I noted with some keen interest the other day that the hon. member for Woodbine had changed his tune a little bit about taxing resources industries and he had begun to talk about tax concessions for those engaged in seasonal work. For a large part of his speech he did not sound like the old bearded socialist zealot, the old Fabian at all. He sounded like the editor of the Financial Post. Nowadays one cannot determine from what a person says—in the nuclear age, the inter-space age—one cannot tell from the jargon just where he belongs. Socialists begin to sound like the editor of the Financial Post, as I say.

Of course, these people have tried this, they have talked about it. I said by way of interpolation to the remarks of the hon. member for York South because I wanted to assist him—I always want to assist him, I always want to inform him—I said when he was speaking he talks about a company making $105 million a year. Well, there is no such company. I suppose the name of the company that was referred to is International Nickel; which did not make $105 million last year, it made $88 million, which, to my hon. friends to my left, is a difference of $18 million—

Mr. MacDonald: We did not say that.

Mr. Sopha: Eighteen million dollars would not be that important—well, he may have said it, but the hon. member underlined it. The hon. member underlined it and did not correct it. They remain socialists to this extent, that the making of a profit is almost sinful, a company is not supposed to make a profit. I said to the hon. member that the same company is investing $75 million in the Sudbury basin over the next five years. He seemed to allude to the fact, that they had made previous announcements that they were investing their money back into expansion, and his attitude—the lilt of his voice almost—seemed to suggest that there was some disbelief.

Now, if he wants to come with me the next time he is in Sudbury to have a look at the Clarabelle pit that is replacing, so far as surface mining is concerned, the open pit which has now been shut down at Frood, and if he wants to—that accounts for $26 million, if my memory is correct, the development of that surface mining, the Clarabelle pit, that sounds almost as if it could be in Bruce county, Clarabelle, and $50 million, Mr. Chairman, in the expansion of the iron ore plant.

I do not come here with any special brief for the International Nickel Company, but as the member for Sudbury I am not ashamed to say something on their behalf and to extoll them in some measure either, because they are a very progressive organization. Formerly this iron ore was thrown out as waste and they, through their own research facilities, developed a process whereby they could save this iron ore. They built a pilot project there and found it to be extremely efficient in the recovery of iron ore from what was formerly waste. The operation can be so economically feasible, financially feasible, that the company announced a year or more ago that they intended to expand the facility by the addition of a plant which will mean an investment of another $50 million.

So it is easy for our friends to the left, Mr. Chairman, to get up and say, "Well, this monolithic corporation ought to be taxed more." It all depends which way you look at it, I suppose. On one hand the company re-invests the money that it makes by profit. The end result of the adoption of the schemes of our hon. friend would be the provision of less jobs, the creation of less wealth and finally the eradication of any incentive on the part of these people whatsoever. I make no apologies for saying those things on behalf of the people and to state my position as being one where I completely reject the insinuations, the innuendoes, that our hon. friends from the west like to—the best word would be that they like to "spread."

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to comment on what has been said here. It is obvious that the Liberal Party is seeking its election funds for the next election and they are going to get them in gobs.

Mr. Sopha: This, of course, is the usual innuendo.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not an innuendo; it is a fact of political life. Now, Mr. Chairman, I rise, not to persist in the argument with these hon. members because I was just underlining what a Conservative member of this House has asked for. That is my significant point, but he wants to climb into bed with INCO and ignore what the Conservatives had asked for, to the detriment of the community where he works. However, could the hon. Minister let me have a reply to the three or four questions that I asked?

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I—

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. member going to let the hon. Minister answer the questions?

Mr. Troy: Oh, pardon me. I would not substitute for him.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: There were several questions which the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asked, and I had them all neatly tabulated, but when all the different items went through unchallenged, I thought I was through.

Mr. MacDonald: They are usually answered before the items.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I thought I had answered these questions in my talk before, when I was presenting the estimates.

Mr. MacDonald: What would the hon. Minister say about the refinery and the TTL then?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: As far as the refinery is concerned, we had many interviews with the industry and with the present owner, as you know. I find that in my department and other departments of the government, it is impossible to keep any secrets from the Opposition. But we have had constant interviews with them, the industry asking that the government take the refinery over and run it. We have investigated the costs and so on—there were some things said about the present owner—and we were progressing along some definite course which might reach a conclusion satisfactory to everybody when we heard from the owner that he was going to carry on. I think that happened just about four or five days ago.

We are hopeful that it will carry on successfully and that the mine operators will maintain their confidence in that plant because I think there is a young man in charge of that plant who is a very knowledgeable man. He has an excellent staff, and any work that has been turned out has been well done. We are watching it very closely and if it looks as if it is going to shut down then I will again step in, or my department of the government will step in, and see what can be done about carrying it on, because I do think that we should not be shipping our ore to the United States to be refined, I think we should do it here if at all possible. But it is under very close scrutiny by the department and we are watching it very carefully.

Mr. MacDonald: There were two or three other questions.

What is the explanation for the 50 per cent jump in revenues from mining royalties this coming year, when there is no increase in rate or no prospective increase in production; anything in that proportion anyway?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I was puzzled with that question. I was wondering if it was a misprint in the budget because we have no record of those figures mentioned by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Page A-10, budget forecast of ordinary revenue, fiscal year April 1, 1962 to March 31, 1963. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, it is my error. My eye went up one column. My apologies, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The apology of the hon. member is accepted, I could not find it.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, on this vote 1207, on access roads. As this House very well knows, this programme was initiated by a very fine gentleman, the late Welland Gemmell of Sudbury. He saw the need for these roads to open up the northland.

The base was broadened, I believe, five or 6 years ago. The worth of those roads is certainly known to anybody who knows the north and the hon. Minister is from northern Ontario. This programme has opened up valuable timber land and valuable land for agricultural settlement. It has given isolated communities opportunity to have direct contact with the outside world. In a word, it has been a splendid development.

But I notice in these estimates that the access road allotment this year is down $550,000 from the current year. We heard very much about the new look for northern Ontario—is this the new look? Is this the first step of the advisory council that has been set up? Is this the first step in its development, that we cut down $550,000 from the estimates? Is that the way the government is going to increase the development of northern Ontario?

If that is the new look, give me the gay nineties!

Mr. Gibson: I regret that in my initial enthusiasm this afternoon I neglected to congratulate the hon. Minister on the assumption of his new portfolio. I should also like to say that I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) as far as the personal qualities of the hon. Minister are concerned.

The hon. Minister, as hon. members know, is from the same general area of the country as I am. I am sure that we can be confident that we will have no prevarication, equivocation or avoiding of answers from this hon. Minister.

With that in mind, I should like to turn to item No. 1207. We have $1 million this year for the opening of the north, an area which is now heavily troubled with unemployment, as we all well know. We have seen also that the highways programme is down by the same amount, one-third. Now I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if this represents something of the views or the hopes of north-western Ontario of this government.

In particular I should like to ask the hon. Minister when the tenders for the Werner-Gordon Lake access road will be called; when construction will start, and what is the expected completion date? As I said, the hon. Minister is a member from north-western Ontario. I am sure that I will not get the insulting answer that I got from the hon. Minister of Highways.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The first question that was asked about the reduction in road expenditures, in that area, of $4 million—from $13 million to $9 million—I think that is what the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) is referring to. The hon. member must remember that the Trans-Canada Highway is almost completed. There is some paving and widening to do, and I know every bit of it because I have been over it so many more times than other hon. members. But do not forget this: most of the rock work and the very expensive construction is finished.

Mr. Gibson: That is utter nonsense, and the hon. Minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, what would the hon. member do if he were the government; just stick $13 million in unless he had a place to put it? That is why the figure is $9 million. This will cover the work necessary; if more is needed the government will provide it.

Let me say something about the mine access roads grant being down from last year. It is not the provincial contribution that is down; it is the federal. It was cut, I think, 50 per cent; that is why we put in an extra $250,000 to make it $1 million. The contribution of this government is up, not down, and I would tell the hon. member that we are holding consultations with the federal government at the present time to try to get more money and to see that they give us more money in the future, if that is possible. These things we are trying to work out.

As for the Werner Lake road into Nickel Mining and Smelting Company property. I have flown over that road myself; I know the difficulties. At the present time, as I told the hon. member, a survey is going on—a study of a very, very expensive bridge structure is being done—and I think the hon. member for Kenora was told that the other day by the secretary of the mining access roads committee. I mentioned the secretary's name to him, sir. If he had called him he would have told him. This announcement was made, it is quite true, at the time of the by-election; but it was a factual announcement, and at no time has this government gone back on it.

But, mind you, these things take time, and we have seen that the road from Manitoba—for immediate purposes, to get the plant and machinery in—is going to serve the purpose. When we start, after the surveys and the bridge structure are done, it is going to take considerable time to get that road finished. It is not a small matter. It will cost about $2 million plus, but we at no time have said that road was not going to be built.

Mr. Wintermeyer: How many miles is it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: About 22 miles to build, I think. There are 30 miles already built from Minaki into the southernmost end, and then there is a small piece up at the north end near the mine; but there are 21 or 22 miles of new road to be built.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, firstly, I should like to say that there is presently an all-weather winter road that was built by the province of Manitoba to the Ontario boundary. I believe that there has been a projection of this road into this mining area which indicates that the Manitoba government, if nothing else, had some foresight, something that I suggest is lacking in this government. If they can do it why cannot we do it?

I should like to reiterate my question, not for my own personal benefit but for the benefit of the unemployed in our area. When will tenders be called and when does the hon. Minister expect to have this project completed?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is impossible to say, because we do not know when this survey is going to be completed. Let me tell the hon. member something about the road from Manitoba. The Manitoba government did not build that road for that mine at all. The hon. member knows that. That is a fishing road and was built there—

Mr. Gibson: Let us have an answer to the question.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Wait a minute, now. These are facts that I am giving the hon. members, and the hon. member for Kenora knows that too. This road has been improved by the mine itself and some $75,000 spent on it, not by the Manitoba government but by Nickel Mining and Smelting. Now remember that. The hon. member said the Manitoba government had built this road in; but we know all these factors. We have worked very closely with the hon. Mr. Dinsdale who is Minister of Northern Affairs in the federal government and who is also in that area; he knows the score and we are carrying on these deliberations and we will go ahead with this road; the hon. member does not need to worry about that. But we are not going to go in there to throw a whole lot of money foolishly around, into a lake or something, until we have the proper surveys made.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, may I rephrase my question? When does the hon. Minister anticipate the survey that is now under way will be completed?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member had better ask the engineers.

Mr. Gibson: I would suggest to the hon. Minister that that is his responsibility, not mine.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am a little puzzled at the haste with which we galloped through the specific votes and then had to plead for replies to questions that had been asked earlier. I am also a little touched by the confidence of the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) that the hon. Minister will not equivocate and evade when a question is asked him. I have tried now to get answers on about four different occasions, and there are two more questions I have asked which the hon. Minister has ignored—questions with regard to research. What is the government's present views on their continuing research in the dangers of radioactivity to the miners in the fields and, secondly, what is the government doing, if anything, on their own, or in conjunction with industry, for the development of the civilian uses of uranium?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I had them all ready but the hon. member went through them so fast it amazed me and I just bundled my papers up.

Mind you, I am not joking about this, because the hon. member's questions are very good ones, and they are important ones. I agree with that.

Radioactivity of the uranium mines. Since the opening up of the uranium mines in Ontario, the levels of radioactivity have been measured at regular intervals in all working places. The levels of radioactivity which are controlled by ventilation have been held very close to the tolerance recommended by the American standards association. It is to be remembered that our ores are low grade in comparison with a large number of operations in other parts of the world, and consequently levels of radioactivity are easier to control.

Now, radiation in the Elliot Lake area is well within safe limits. First, this a low grade ore, and our ventilation and testing programme and that of The Department of Health and the Water Resources Commission have reduced this danger in Elliot Lake to a minimum.

Does that answer the question?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it does—except for this one point: the experts in the department's report two or three years ago pointed out, that we may keep our levels of radioactivity below the level of tolerance, but the cumulative effect of a level which is below the level of tolerance may rise above the level of tolerance. In other words, the danger is a cumulative one.

I am not asserting this to be a fact. This is a new field. The experts do not know what the impact is going to be on the human race. This may turn us all into monsters two generations hence, or idiots or heaven knows what, but the hon. Minister's answer ignores this rather key point, if there is any validity in it. While the level of tolerance may be maintained the cumulative effect ultimately will create as great a danger. I do not know what the experts, or what the hon. Minister's own department, feel.

Secondly, the hon. Minister has still not answered the question as to what this government is doing, if anything, alone or in conjunction with industry, in the development of the civilian uses of uranium.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member has brought out a good point about radioactivity. I am sure that our men, hearing him speak, will be alert and we will carry on with this investigation to see that it does not get to the point where it is serious.

Research with uranium and steels is being carried on by the federal Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Although more work has to be carried out we hope it will fill the need for peacetime use of uranium. We are constantly looking into the peacetime uses.

On the contract that was mentioned this afternoon I was talking to the hon. George Hees not so many days ago and they were hopeful that they would have that contract before now, but it is a question of price and also a stretch-out. They have not arrived jointly at a satisfactory arrangement, but they are very hopeful that it will be done before long and we all hope the same thing. I know the Opposition does, too.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, just one other thing that I forgot. The hon. Minister may be so kind as to give an answer to this. I well recall last year that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) inquired of the then Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney) about the development of the ocean port at Moosonee. In reference thereto, it is peculiarly appropriate that he should have inquired because we are all concerned about the vast resources of iron ore that there are in the Belcher islands, and I well recall, also last year, that the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) replied, with respect to the government's plans for the development of that port, and I am happy to see the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay) nodding, because he remembers, too, when that discussion took place.

Mr. MacDonald: It is part of his empire now.

Mr. Sopha: It is? Well, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we could hear from the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) or the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay) or the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in the same way this year about the government's intentions with respect to the development of an ocean port at Moosonee.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I say to the hon. member that I welcome his inquiry. I was going to deal with this tomorrow in the estimates of The Department of Commerce and Development, and at that time table the large report which has been carried out by the federal Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, and to discuss these tomorrow, if the hon. member would like.

Vote 1207 agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of supply rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES COMMISSION ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill No. 77, An Act to amend the Ontario Water Resources Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DEPARTMENT OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 79, An Act to amend The Department of Municipal Affairs Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. 79 is the one that the hon. Minister advised was self-explanatory—and I suppose he gets that from the explanatory note which says that it is self-explanatory. In the past, we have heard a great deal from the former Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and other members of the government front benches about the importance of local autonomy. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this bill is a real attack on all the principles of local autonomy that the government has been talking about for many years. What in effect this bill says, as I read it in any event, is that if an assessment has been made, even if there has been an appeal to the court of revision, county judge, or the municipal board, and suddenly someone in The Department of Municipal Affairs comes to the conclusion that this assessment is unreasonable, the department can, of its own volition say, "Let us cancel that all out and start over again," and send in its own assessors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what motivates the principle behind this. Is it that the department has suddenly come to the conclusion that municipal assessors cannot do their jobs properly? Is it that the department has determined now that there will be a province-wide system of assessment? If this is what the government has in mind why does it not come out and say so?

At the session of the select committee on municipal affairs to inquire into The Municipal Act and related Acts, there were a number of suggestions put forward by the members to the effect that the system of county assessors was a good one and should be extended. There was certain criticism levied at the present legislation on the basis that the only way of having a county assessor's opinion apply throughout the whole county was on the basis of unanimous consent of all the municipalities in that county.

It was noted on the way by, that no county had ever achieved that unanimous consent but that the idea was a good one—that there should be similar standards of assessment throughout the whole county. And I submit that this is a good and sensible idea even though it has not been applied.

There was the additional question, and it was raised by several witnesses who appeared before the select committee and by several members of the committee, that it was pretty difficult to obtain assessors of competent training because many of the smaller municipalities were unable to pay them sufficiently high salaries; that there were not recognized standards of training for municipal assessors; that the department has not as yet, as they have done with auditors, determined what the qualifications are of certificated or qualified assessors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what puzzles me about this, and what I think is a most peculiar thing in the government's approach to this self-explanatory bill, is that suddenly they are throwing over this whole idea of municipal autonomy; they are taking into the department the right to completely discard an assessment, even after it has been approved by a court of revision or county court judge or the Ontario Municipal Board. And they are substituting their own view. They can appoint new assessors and do the whole thing over again. I think the hon. Minister must give this House the real explanation as to why this very important departure from principle is being taken at this time.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has, I think set forth very well, the arguments and many discussions there have been before the select committee of which he is a member, and in many other places and the reasons why a provincially equalized assessment might be a sound matter from the viewpoint of administration of certain things such as grants. However, he has also said something which, I believe, is still the policy of this government namely, that this government does believe in and does wish to respect municipal autonomy. That is still a valid statement of government policy so far as myself and my department are concerned. I confirm what the hon. member has said with respect to government policy in that regard.

This particular section is a section which does give—as the hon. member has pointed out the Act is quite self-explanatory—it does give to the department the right to have a re-assessment where the department deems necessary. Although that is not in there I can assure the hon. member and all hon. members the department would never arbitrarily order such a re-assessment. Where the department, in consultation with and, I am sure, at the urging of, a local municipality, feels that such patent inequalities, by reason of certain appeals to the court of revision, exist, in cases where some owners had appealed and other owners with equally good cases had not appealed, there could be then a patent injustice and the basis for the tax would be unfair and unreasonable.

I think that it is only right that this government should allow the local municipality, at its request, to have a new assessment made, not necessarily by government assessors but by those acceptable to the municipality as well as to the department. Then in the current year all people would be used properly; the tax basis would be the same, the tax basis would be fair, the little man as well as the big man would pay a reasonable and fair tax.

That, Mr. Speaker, is in essence the reason for this amendment. I doubt very much if it will be used on very many occasions. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members of this House, that it will not be used in any municipality where the local authorities do not wish this assistance from the department in order to have their people used fairly.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister where the initiative had come from with respect to this piece of legislation? Who has requested it? The hon. Minister has said it is not likely to be used very often. Would he advise the House under what circumstances it would be used? Who has outlined the reasons why this particular piece of legislation should be brought forth?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, that is a fair question, and yet to answer it would be almost impossible in most cases because until the case arises, it would be pretty hard to say whether any particular municipality would be one affected by this Act.

But I would say this that it arose in The Department of Municipal Affairs and arose out of the consideration of a situation, Mr. Speaker, which would arise particularly in those municipalities which are closely supervised by the department. I believe that all hon. members are aware that since the municipalities that went into supervision during the depression have been released from supervision by the department, there are now only improvement districts under the direct supervision of the department and those municipalities which receive a mining tax grant are also under a certain amount of supervision by my department.

The officials of my department have become concerned that in certain areas it would be possible, and probably is so, that an assessment made in the year before for taxation, the next year could be badly thrown off balance by many things, including appeals which were successful by a small segment of the tax paying base. So as a matter of concern to them, they recommended to me, and I did to the government and to this House, that this power be given to the department officials so that, as occasion arises, it may be so used.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would permit another question that has occurred to me as a result of his remarks?

Has the department no faith in the appeals safeguards presently in The Assessment Act? There are appeals to courts of revision from there to a county court judge, from there to the municipal board. Have there been criticisms of the disposition of these appeals? What in fact is being done, Mr. Speaker, is to provide an appeal from an appeal from an appeal. And here is a new appeal which can be handled by the department after the aggrieved persons have exhausted three other sets of appeals.

I am surprised really that the hon. Minister, apparently by introducing this Act, shows such little faith in the decisions of courts of revision or county court judges or even his own Ontario Municipal Board.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister said that this would rarely be used. The question is: it can be used at any time, and an appeal can survive three stages—the court of revision, the county judge or the board—and yet The Department of Municipal Affairs can overrule the whole thing. I just cannot understand why that should be so.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) perhaps has taken the words of the previous speaker and not thought for a moment about them and the Act as presented. There is no question about the excellent system of appeals from assessment per se. Each year that system of appeals works well, each year assessment rolls are amended and varied here and there by successful appeals.

The problem, which the last speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa propounded, could be answered perhaps by this: that in certain areas, and it is quite evident in some of the municipalities under supervision that I have referred to, certain large taxpayers could appeal their assessment. Smaller ones would not appeal it, the large ones might be successful in an appeal and be successful because they had grounds of appeal that were reasonable and which the court would see.

The other fellow, not having appealed, of course would be stuck with the assessment on a basis different from that which the court of revision or the county judge or the Ontario Municipal Board might rule on appeal to be a proper basis of assessment. Then we would have for the next year two classes of taxpayers—those assessed on one basis, on a much higher assessment, and those one or two that had enough money and were fortunate enough and smart enough to appeal and have their appeal successful because the facts backed them up. So that type of inequity, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of inequity which this is drafted to prevent.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the hon. Minister that what he has said just now makes a good deal of common sense, and certainly adds to the excellence and efficiency of operation; but the phraseology of the Act is so much broader. It would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in any instance this department is authorized by the Legislature to overrule the several judicial bodies that normally determine the assessment of a given property.

I can understand that in a given situation where one individual makes and succeeds in an appeal, that others in order to be dealt with equitably, who would, but for the fact they did not appeal, be entitled to the same remedy, should be entitled to it by virtue of the Act of the department. Now why can we not say just that?

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the phraseology here is so broad and so all-inclusive that understandably the Opposition is concerned to know why and under what circumstances it is limited to the illustration that has been made. I think we can phrase that particular objective clearly and in simple and direct language.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has said is probably quite true; but I would say two things with respect to it. One is, of course, that I am quite sure that any municipalities who have had dealings with the officials of this department of government, can rely on their common sense in being sure that it is a necessity before any action is taken. The second thing is that this does not affect any rights of appeal which now exist; and the only time that this Act, as I was advised by my advisers when this was being drawn, would come into play would not be if the ordinary appeal were successful and one man got a better deal than another fellow; it would come into play if such appeal affected the whole basis of the assessment and the taxation in that community for the coming year. Now, if the hon. leader of the Opposition has another question, I would be glad to answer it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to labour this point unnecessarily, but let me read to you the phraseology:

Where it appears to the department that by reason of the revision or alteration of an assessment roll in accordance with a decision or decisions of the court of revision, the county judge, or the board, the roll as so revised or altered is inequitable in respect of a substantial number of persons shown on the roll, the department may order that the entire roll as revised or altered be set aside and direct a new assessment to be made by such person as it may designate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that that does permit the department to interfere in any decision of any of the three judicial bodies.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, it does not empower the department to interfere any more than the present custom, which I deplore, of assessment commissioners. When an assessment has been made for the current year, and it is appealed to the county judge or even the municipal board, before that order is out, hardly, the assessor has the right, and very often exercises that right, of re-assessing, for the next year at the same figure. That could also be considered an interference with the ruling of a court.

We have no intention under this Act, Mr. Speaker, to interfere at all. The judge's order, the court of revision order or the board order will stand so far as that assessment is concerned. All that happens is that there could be a new and equitable assessment made thereafter.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I still cannot understand—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. members will realize that we are going a little far, as it were, in second reading. We are getting down to details and cross-questions and so forth. I think the hon. members realize that the rules of second readings are that hon. members speak once. However, that is where hon. members can ask questions and so forth, when we are in the committee stage.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 80, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, while I recognize that in second readings we generally should debate the principle of the bill, as hon. members look at this bill they will recognize that there are three separate principles. I want to address my remarks to the principle in the third subsection of this bill, that concerning the question of appeals from orders of the Ontario Municipal Board.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware of a substantial difficulty this government found itself in when it attempted to work under the old section 94 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act. An incident arose before the municipal board concerning a subdivision known as the St. Andrew subdivision.

There were long and involved hearings on the municipal level and before the municipal board. The municipal board handed down its decision which did not meet with the approval of all of the people affected. A group of them appealed under the old section 94 to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. For the first time, Mr. Speaker, I believe since section 94 or its predecessor has been in the statute books, on this occasion the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council purported to act under the old section 94.

The old section 94 allows the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to act after there has been a hearing and after there has been notice. In this particular case I speak of, there was no hearing and there was no notice. Nevertheless, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council purported to act and an order-in-council was passed. The old section 94 allowed the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to approve, vary or rescind the order of the municipal board.

Notwithstanding that, sir, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council purported to refer the decision, or portion of the decision of the municipal board, back to the municipal board. A further hearing took place before the municipal board and it was brought to the attention of the board by the solicitor for the subdivider that in his opinion the attempted action by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council was invalid because it did not fall within the four walls of the old section 94. The municipal board at the request of this gentleman, the solicitor, referred the matter to the court of appeal for a decision.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council purported to act, and, as I think I have pointed out, acted quite improperly, there was no one from the government present—there was no one from the hon. Attorney-General's (Mr. Roberts') office present, there was no one from the law arm of the government present—to argue before the court of appeal of this province that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council had in fact acted legally and properly.

It is passing strange, at least, Mr. Speaker, that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council should act or purport to act within the terms of the statute, and when these actions are questioned before the court of appeal of this province the government did not see fit to defend the actions of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. However, this is what they chose to do. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, the day before the court of appeal was due to hear this questioned order-in-council the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council had a new order-in-council rescinding the one that was to be reviewed by the court of appeal the following morning.

Notwithstanding this, the court of appeal carried on with their hearing on the first order-in-council and it took them a very small amount of time, a very few minutes to say that in their opinion, their unanimous opinion, that the first order-in-council was completely and thoroughly invalid. In fact, one of the learned judges said that he had grave doubts about the second order-in-council but that matter was not before him and so he was not going to give an opinion on it.

Mr. Speaker, the government having gotten themselves into that difficulty, are now attempting to bail themselves out by changing that section. They acted improperly, they were not prepared to defend their action, their action was thrown out by the court of appeal, and now they are amending the section. Let us see what we have here.

At least in the old section 94 the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council in this sort of a case—an appeal from the municipal board—was allowed to act after notice and on a hearing, and the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council could do certain things. He could alter or vary or rescind or confirm the order of the municipal board. Now here in the first part of section 94 the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, without a hearing, without notice, completely unilaterally, can alter, vary or rescind. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is something most unusual in this purported action of the government where they are taking unto themselves the right to confirm or vary or rescind an order of the municipal board without notice and without a hearing. These orders can be and are in so many cases very, very important. If there is any importance in there being an appeal from this type of an order, surely in equity and in fairness and in reasonableness, if the government is going to interfere with what has been discussed in a municipality, what has been discussed before a planning board, what has been discussed by the Ontario Municipal Board—the government's own appointed and impartial board—surely, if the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council is going to interfere with this, he should keep in what was in the old section 94, the right to notice and the right to a hearing.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in subsection 2 of this new section 94 there is the most unique provision. I just do not understand the purpose of this at all. As I read subsection 2, every order that has ever been made by the Ontario Municipal Board for the period of six months after this Act is passed is subject to an appeal.

Every order that the Ontario Municipal Board has ever made can now be reviewed and can be dealt with by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council without notice and without a hearing. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is an awful thing if the government really means what they say in this section. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the government has a duty to tell the people of Ontario why every order that was ever passed and every decision that was ever made by the Ontario Municipal Board should be open to review for a period of sixty days.

Now then, if the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council does not act himself what happens? He is given power to require the board to re-hear the hearing on which they have already given a decision. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the municipal board already has power to re-hear on a proper motion a matter it has already dealt with. The matter comes from the municipality to the municipal board and they hear it and they give a decision.

Later if they determine that they should re-hear it and they have this power and they do, they hear it a second time. And if the people who are concerned about this still are not satisfied, they go to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council and he can do one of two things. He can change it without notice and without a hearing or he can say, "I am going to send it back to the municipal board and they can hear it for a third time."

Mr. Speaker, very briefly, if it is important that there be an appeal system from the Ontario Municipal Board, surely the government can do better than this new section they have before us.

This brings us to the very important principle as to whether or not there should be an appeal from the Ontario Municipal Board.

We have heard from the hon. gentlemen opposite for a long time that the municipal board is impartial, not influenced. It decides as it will in the best judgment of the very able gentlemen who are the members of that board. If this is in fact so, then why should there be this sort of an appeal system? If the government is satisfied with this sort of a system should they not give security of tenure to the members of the municipal board?

Should they not hold office during good behaviour, as the judges of our courts do, or should they continue in office merely at pleasure, as they do now? This whole idea, Mr. Speaker, suggests to me that the government is not concerned about the impartiality of the municipal board. What is going to be the reaction of the municipal board if the government acts under sub-section (b) of section 1—and the board, having sat once or twice, now sits a third time because the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council determines that they re-hear what they have heard and possibly have re-heard? Truly they are going to get the idea very quickly that they have no security of tenure, that the government is not very happy with what they have decided and they should do it all over again and decide in the way the government seems to indicate they should.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think this section 94 is completely and thoroughly inequitable, establishes a new and a very bad and dangerous principle, and should not be supported by this House.

Hon. Mr. Cass: May I just say that this bill will go to the committee on municipal law and at that time the hon. members will have the opportunity of discussing it.

MONDAY, MARCH 12, 1962

The House resumed at 8:00 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND MINISTER OF CITIZENSHIP

On vote 1601:

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, might I speak for just a moment before we get started? I want to straighten up a question of procedure that arose on Friday afternoon. If hon. members look at the order paper, they will note that order No. 18 is the consideration of the report of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario for the year ending March 31, 1961. I put this order on the paper to have a vehicle for debating liquor, and anything hon. members choose to debate concerning it, in the House. This will not be called this week but I will feel free to call it any time after the end of this week.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). I think this is the obvious solution to this problem. It is the one we resorted to with the Hydro commission. I think it is the tidiest way to handle the problem of debate on the liquor commission too.

I need not say, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on these estimates has been most unpredictable and has covered many fronts. We find ourselves switching back and forward, but I want to go back to what is one of the main aspects of this department's work prior to the injection into it of the citizenship work. I am referring to the incorporation of companies and problems relating thereto.

Now my colleague, the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) raised in the House here what I think is, to any serious-minded citizen in this province, an increasingly disturbing problem, and that is the number of occasions in which the public becomes aware of the grossest kind of irregularities or exploitations by companies, often leading up to eventual bankruptcy. Some of the principals involved disappear, and apparently nothing can be done about it.

My hon. colleague suggested that there should be some tightening up of the Act and particularly that there should be some more stringent supervision and regulation by the department which establishes these companies. I will have to congratulate the hon. Minister, he gave a very smart political reply because the hon. member for Woodbine made the argument that, instead of permitting one person in reality to set up a company—because all he has to do is bring in an aunt, an uncle, a brother or sister or mother, any two others and set up the necessary three directors—the rights of incorporation of a company should be restricted to a greater number of persons. The hon. Minister construed this as restricting this privilege of setting up a limited company for big corporations and the little fellow was going to be deprived of it and he gave a very smart political speech.

I want to come back to this, Mr. Chairman, because I was thinking about it over the weekend, particularly when I had an opportunity to discuss related problems with farmers and trade unionists. I say related problems because in my view what this Legislature does through the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) is actually to delegate certain powers when it incorporates a company. It grants to an individual, along with other individuals, the right to set up a company which limits personal liability. It thereby creates a new personality—if I may use that term—the company itself.

It is true that this company has to report periodically to the hon. Provincial Secretary's department, but anybody who examines the files will very quickly be reminded of the fact that these reports are not necessarily done when the law requires. When The Department of the Provincial Secretary reminds them of their laxity in not reporting at the end of each year, this is sometimes ignored and it goes on for a year or two and on occasion after some time, The Department of the Provincial Secretary then proceeds to the point of withdrawing the charter from the company.

What strikes me, Mr. Chairman, as rather interesting—since this government would claim that it was administering the law evenly to all groups in the community—is to pause for a moment and consider the laxity with which this government deals with the supervision and the inspection, if you will, of the exercise of this delegated power when it goes to a limited company, and the growing concern that this government manifests in the delegation of power that it makes—for example, to a group of workers who establish a trade union or to a group of farmers who establish collective bargaining through a marketing scheme.

As a matter of fact, a year or two ago this government became so exercised at what farmers might do in using the power that was delegated to them, that we passed Bill No. 86 which now makes it possible for the government to intervene in the day-to-day operation, dictating the amount of money farmers will raise, dictating the amount of money they will spend—or at least making it subject to supervision—even making it possible for the government to step in and establish a trusteeship.

There is certainly a growing pressure from certain quarters that there should be increasing intervention in the exercise of power that this Legislature delegates to trade unions. Now in contrast to that, I ask the House to consider for one moment what goes on with regard to companies. There is the grossest kind of laxity. I invite, for example, hon. members of this Legislature some time to read through the transcript of the Royal commission which investigated the Dimensional Investments in that so-called Hydro land deal with the Indians in the Sarnia area. We had the most incredible operations of companies, behind the front of a company, once it had secured the charter—not living up to the law at all.

And, of course, the most striking example is the one that was drawn to the attention of the House in some detail just a week or so ago by the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson), this so-called Piggyland scheme up in the Sunderland area, incorporated as the Associated Livestock Growers of Ontario.

Now, hon. members, who may have doubted some of the brief exposition of what this company did when the hon. member for Dovercourt referred to it last week, will have had an opportunity in last Friday's or Saturday's Toronto Daily Star to read a full account of this company's operations in Pierre Berton's column. It is just a factual presentation. Yet, without going through the whole detail of it, the incredible thing here, Mr.

Chairman, is this, that here was obviously the shakiest kind of financial arrangement. When a certain Mr. Baun came in to operate the scheme, he came to the conclusion that they were "selling non-existent pigs for vastly inflated prices." The company was guaranteeing astonishing profits—a net of $300 a year on an investment of $500—"enough to make any real pig farmer rub his eyes in disbelief," says Pierre Berton.

But then, on through the column—and I am not going to take the time of the House to list them—there were five or six attempts on the part of this man who, for a short time, was managing the farm and discovered it to be the most flagrant kind of swindle; five or six efforts on the part of this man to arouse the police, papers, radio stations, The Department of Agriculture. What really amazes me is the only place he did not go was the hon. Provincial Secretary's department. I am almost persuaded that they knew that was futile and would not achieve anything.

But here is a man operating—and we are told repeatedly through Pierre Berton's column—legally, and yet he swindles, inside a year and a half, something like $1.8 million out of a public who were led to believe the whole scheme was sound by papers in whom they had placed their confidence. In spite of the evidence, the police and all of these other responsible people would not act.

If you wanted any more proof, Mr. Chairman, that The Companies Act and its operation, and the granting of charters without some more adequate supervision and inspection of what goes on once you have granted that power, surely it is most conclusively set forward in this most recent case.

I wonder whether the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) can be persuaded not to get up and give us another little speech saying that he is defending the little fellow who wants to get incorporated and have a limited liability and he is not going to restrict this privilege to the big fellows, or whether I can persuade him to share with the House his thinking, his worries—I cannot believe that he has not got some worries—as to what is the legitimate responsibility of government which grants charters through his departments—to see if we cannot bring some end to the kind of thing that went on in the Piggyland deal, or was revealed by the Royal commission in the Sarnia deal.

I ask the hon. Minister whether he has had any sober second thoughts after the weekend, now that he has unburdened himself of the political aspects of it, as to what, if anything, he thinks might be done to avoid this kind of abuse and exploitation of the public under the guise of a charter that he grants?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to know that the hon. member, leader of the NDP group (Mr. MacDonald), has evidently had some second sober thoughts over the weekend as opposed to the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden).

Mr. Chairman, in relationship to the returns that are required under The Corporations Act, the law of the province of Ontario, at present 87 per cent of the corporations whose names we have on our records file returns. In 1959 there were 52,590; in 1960, 53,000; and in 1961, 55,000. A number of years ago, approximately half a dozen, the companies division was in a position to start clearing their files of companies who had not filed annual returns. In accordance with the law, the Provincial Secretary has the discretion to cancel for failure to file returns after a period of three years. In the year 1956 there were over 2,700 such cancelled; in 1957, 1,700; in 1958, 1,000; in 1959, 2,100; in 1960, 2,600; and last year, 3,800; for not complying with the law. That is the way that is being administered.

I bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Chairman, that the marketing schemes, once they are in effect, are compulsory; whereas so far as companies are concerned it is completely voluntary on the part of the individual whether he will participate in a private corporation or in a public corporation. The task of looking over the shoulders of some 60,000 or more companies in the province of Ontario, to police them on the part of The Department of the Provincial Secretary, would be, I suggest, a task of money and time and effort which would outweigh the abuse by a limited number of individuals through the corporate scheme.

The laws of the province are stated in The Corporations Act at present. The matter was reviewed in detail by a select committee of this House who devoted, I believe, some two or more years to the study of the Act. We are in continuous study of the Act to bring it up to date. As the hon. member will recall, we introduced legislation in this House, last year, that would require the immediate return to be filed in respect of change of directors, in addition to returns to be filed in respect of the redemption of shares.

Because publicity is given to the fact that people have made some abuses, these abuses are not necessarily brought about by reason of the fact that they are incorporated.

There is nothing to lead us to believe that this man who had the Piggyland scheme would not have done exactly the same, not having been incorporated. The same thing applies where other people do not, for example, pay unemployment insurance or vacation with pay. The same circumstances, the same thing, could apply even if the persons were not incorporated. The fact that there is a corporation does not necessarily give any added protection to the individual except in the limited liability aspect; and to do away with the limited liability aspect for all corporations, in order to prevent the abuse by the very small number, I think would be setting back the commerce and industry of this province over 150 years.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to pursue this very much longer except to say that I am not completely satisfied that it is not possible, through changes in the Act, to have more stringent regulations which would close the door somewhat to the kind of abuses that we hear of frequently. That is one aspect. The second aspect of the problem, even more shocking, is that, even when people go out of their way and spend a good deal of time and effort to try to bring gross violations to the attention of authorities, they do not seem to be able to get action. This is what we had here in the instance of the Piggyland deal, and in the instance of the—maybe not in the hon. Provincial Secretary's department, I will concede, because, as I said, I do not think they ever came to his department; they seemed to go to everybody else.

However, the other aspect of the question is that if they cannot get response from the authorities when a situation is brought to their attention, then it seems to me that there is great laxity; the administrative functions do not roll into action even when they are drawn to their attention.

The hon. Minister pleads that they cannot have people looking over the shoulders of 60,000 companies. Suppose I accept his argument that for the moment nothing can be done. Why cannot he get action when people do draw to his attention gross inequities and exploitation in this instance?

If I may go back to the one he cites about people, incorporated or otherwise, who violate laws and do not give holidays with pay and unemployment insurance and things of this nature; that was rather a poor one to raise, because once again this is the kind of thing that was drawn to the attention of this government before a select committee and the government refused to do anything about it. Two years later they reaped the consequences of their failure to act in the kind of explosion we had in the construction industry this past year.

However, I have drawn it to the attention of the hon. Minister once again and I suggest we cannot tolerate this kind of thing happening as frequently as it does without examining whether or not there is not a possibility for tightening up the Act somewhat more than is the case at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that since I have been Provincial Secretary there is no complaint that has been brought to my attention in relationship to corporations that I have not gone into. Some hon. members have on behalf of their constituents brought certain matters to my attention. If we have had power under the Act we have acted under the Act; and if we do not have the power we have used our good offices to see that the source of complaint was attended to.

I am sure that in complaints to the Deputy Provincial Secretary, whose service goes back many years, knowing the man that he is, I cannot conceive of him or the previous Provincial Secretaries not having acted on the complaint.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has gratuitously stated that the making of a complaint would be "futile." I suggest to him that perhaps the mistake was that they did not come to us, because they would either have received satisfaction from us or they would have been directed or advised what steps to take in this regard.

Votes 1601 and 1602 agreed to.

On vote 1603:

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, on vote 1603. Insofar as I have been able to ascertain this is about the only place in the estimates that we can discuss generally, I hope, the question of electoral laws and redistribution and that sort of thing. You will recall, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this matter was threshed out in this Legislature either last year or the year before and it was ruled by the chairman of the day that the discussion on these matters did not come in the estimates of the Provincial Secretary, that there was ample opportunity in the Throne speech and in the budget speech, for debate on these things. In this instance there will be also an opportunity on the motion that the hon. leader of the House, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has in respect to the announcement he made in connection with redistribution.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is a government policy to stifle the sort of interchange that we can have only on estimates and say that this kind of a discussion is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order!

Mr. Singer: The hon. Prime Minister introduced this bill.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that there is no thought—

Mr. Singer: If we are not allowed to discuss this with some responsible Minister, then we are being muzzled, Mr. Chairman, and—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —there is no thought of stifling it, there will be plenty of opportunity during the course of this Legislature. If the hon. member will only familiarize himself with the rules and procedure of this House he will find ample opportunity.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would point out that the ruling of the prior Chairman is in no way binding on you. I simply suggest, unlike the ruling of the Speaker, that you are quite free to make a ruling in your good discretion. I hope that you would do that.

Mr. Singer: I am talking about the election officer. Is there anything more vital, Mr. Chairman, to the welfare of this province than proper election procedure? If we cannot discuss it under the heading, chief electoral officer, where then can it be discussed?

An hon. member: Go ahead!

Mr. Chairman: I rule it out of order, the same as the previous Chairman.

Mr. Singer: Out of order?

Mr. Chairman: Yes!

Mr. Singer: For what reason?

Mr. Wintermeyer: You must give some reason, Mr. Chairman. We are in no position to determine whether to challenge your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: The ruling is the same as that of the previous Chairman.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, that is no reason, Mr. Chairman.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have one—I do not know whether this is in the same category, I will have to bow to your ruling—but I wanted to get some clarification on an issue that comes under the chief electoral officer who is responsible for the publication of the official results of each general election.

The point I want to draw to the attention of the House is this: the hon. members and the public will recall reading during the by-election in Kenora public discussion of the strange developments when, in the last two elections there, in a number of polls that happened to be predominantly polls in Indian reserves there was almost a unanimous vote in favour of the Conservative. I am not going to go through the whole detail of this in terms of the unanimous vote but there is one that I would like to draw to the attention of the House.

Mr. Chairman: Order. This is the same as the previous one.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, Mr. Chairman, just a minute, let me point this out and you can take it up next. There is nothing scheduled for the order paper which will permit us to discuss the publication of the election results which are the responsibility of the chief election officer—nothing at all. Now, why can it not be raised at the present time?

Mr. Singer: Is the government afraid to have this sort of thing discussed publicly?

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. This has nothing to do with future election procedures. What is your ruling, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Out of order? For what reason? May I ask, Mr. Chairman, for what reason?

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead then.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order now.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Singer: Am I in order now, Mr. Chairman? Thank you. Well now, Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to find that I am now in order, so let me get on with some of the things that bothered me about the election laws of the province of Ontario.

When the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) introduced the bill about redistribution, I attempted to compliment him at that time, but was ruled out of order, so let me say now that I do compliment him.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not introduce the bill, I only made a statement of intention.

Mr. Singer: Oh, the bill has not come in yet?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No.

Mr. Singer: Well, when the hon. Prime Minister made his statement, I complimented him for enunciating the principle and I look forward to seeing the bill. But I think, Mr. Chairman, there is a very serious problem other than the mere statement of the principle. The principle was expressed by us with a resolution standing in my name, but I think it is most important that some real consideration be given to the terms of reference which are going to be given to this independent commission.

I think something of the utmost importance has to be determined in ascertaining whether or not one rural vote should be the same as one urban vote. Is it reasonable and fair that some members should represent four or five times as many constituents as other members? Is it reasonable and fair that some urban ridings be a third of the size, in population, of others?

Should there be any sort of a balance? Should there be the sort of proportion that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) talked about last year, as they used in Manitoba—7-to-4, I think, is the ratio? Or should there be some real representation by population? That sort of thing is most important and I hope when the bill comes in there is some form of direction to this independent commission.

Then, Mr. Chairman, as we have been discovering, there are great and serious inequities in the electoral laws of the province. The question of expense is a very serious matter. Recently, in the province of Quebec, the government introduced certain legislation which makes an effort to get at the whole question of electoral expenses. Should there be limits on how much an individual candidate can spend in an election? Should the government on behalf of all the people of Ontario dispense certain monies, so much a voter? Should there be a closer and better system of determining whence come donations; a better system of reporting these things?

In a recent by-election, a couple of which resulted in recounts, it was very disappointing—a great number of people disenfranchised themselves because they put ticks on the ballot instead of crosses. Surely it would seem reasonable and logical today that if a voter has indicated his intention, whether by a tick or cross or in any way that can be readily ascertained, that his vote should be counted rather than not counted.

That sort of thing is of substantial importance. Might there not be some very substantial value in insisting that there be, on the ballot, the political allegiance of the various candidates, if they choose to put that political allegiance on the ballot?

Surely that would be a substantial help?

The whole question of scrutineers being part of the electoral machinery—should scrutineers not be regarded as a permanent part of the electoral machinery? Should the government not pay for the hiring of scrutineers, representing various parties, on election day?

I think it is most important, and my hon. leader was enunciating this same principle on Friday last when we were discussing another matter—the expense of people staying in public life, the very fantastic expenses that can be incurred in elections. It is important that we have a real democracy where people, notwithstanding their financial ability, are able to stand for public office. And I think it is incumbent upon the government and all of us here to come forward with some sort of suggestions to reorganize our electoral laws, which really have not been substantially changed for many, many years.

Is our system of enumerating the best system? Or might there not be a permanent system of registration?

An hon. member: How many hundreds of thousands has the hon. member spent?

Mr. Singer: I have not added it up. A very serious question again indeed, Mr. Chairman. As you know, we have various types of elections under the provincial law. We have the provincial elections; we have votes under The Liquor Licence Act—the laws seem to be different. I know that in recent recounts under The Liquor Licence Act the judge conducting the recount came to the conclusion that you could mark the ballot with a tick in that particular election, but on a recount in the provincial election a different judge came to the conclusion that only a ballot marked with an “X” was correct.

Then we have municipal elections. Surely, Mr. Chairman, it would make some good common sense if we only had one set of election laws for municipal, provincial and other elections, such as elections under The Liquor Licence Act. Then there is the question of the term of office for a returning officer—is it reasonable? And there are certain bills on the order paper, private members’ bills, trying to get at this problem of when by-elections should be called. The government is taking refuge—they are not the first government to do it—but they have taken refuge in the fact that there is no one to whom the writ can be issued, because there is no returning officer appointed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We called the by-elections.

Mr. Singer: Yes, this administration did; but the previous administration was reluctant to call the by-elections, and there is no time limit. Does it not make some reasonable sense, Mr. Chairman, that after a riding has been vacant for a certain length of time—a month, two months or three months—that it should be mandatory that a by-election be called?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member should not complain.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: When the hon. member was in office he left one three years.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) keeps on throwing things at us that happened from 1943, on back to the year 1934. None of us here, except my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver), was a part of that government, and frankly the rest of us here were even too young to vote when all of these things took place.

I am not standing here, Mr. Chairman, to defend the actions of the Hepburn government. We are standing here to criticize honestly and fairly the actions of this government.

All of these things, Mr. Chairman, are things that I think demand the government’s most serious and immediate attention. Another question that comes up is a little game that is being played now in Ottawa. Is there going to be an election in May or June or April or September? Might there not be some very great merit in saying that an election must come every four or five years, and it must be on the first Monday of such and such a month.

Mr. Chairman, to get the best form of democratic government that is available, the sort of things that I have dealt with very briefly I think demand immediate examination. I appreciate the fact that I am able to talk about this tonight. I have tried to talk about it at previous times and I would like very much to get the reactions of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to this type of suggestion. I would hope that the hon. Prime Minister would be prepared to say he is going to appoint a select committee or an independent commission to thoroughly investigate these things and bring in some real amendments to the election laws to make the running of elections the most equitable and democratic that they can possibly be in this province.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I can only say that I do not object to this matter being discussed here. I do not think it is necessary to be discussed but I do not object to it. However, in view of the fact that I have given the House some indication of what we propose to do and it will be debatable when it is brought in, I will save my comment for that time.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to support the conclusions of the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Singer) who has just taken his seat. Without reviewing all of the points he has raised, some of which I would agree with very much and some of which I would disagree with, and there are others that I think can be added, it seems to me that all of these issues raise the advisability of establishing some sort of a body that can look at The Election Act itself. I think I am correct in stating that the last time we had a redistribution, which was done by a committee of this Legislature, a procedure which we are now going to forsake in favour of an independent commission—that is fine, but the whole question of what amendments should be made to The Election Act, I submit, might be the subject of discussion in this House. Inevitably we are going to have to come to grips with it in a workmanlike way; it will have to be in some sort of a committee. Therefore I would reiterate, along with the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) for the consideration of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) either now or later when he introduces the matters of the House, whether or not he is considering establishing a committee of the Legislature that will take a look at least at The Election Act, even though the redistribution is handed over to an independent commission.

The specific point I would like to raise with regard to the report is: one can speculate as to why all these unanimous votes or near unanimous votes took place in the last two elections on behalf of the Conservatives in certain areas in Kenora.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): What does the hon. member think?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member can speculate as well as I can.

However, there is one, Mr. Chairman, that I think something more than speculation—you do not need to speculate on it. There is the poll in the 1959 election in Bearskin where, when the votes were counted, there were 103 for the Conservatives, there were none for the CCF, there were 6 for the Liberals, for a total of 109; and yet when you look further you come to a column that says the number of names on the polling list was 99. Now that really lets the cat out of the bag. I have had the argument advanced that this was because more names were put on the voters' list on election day but I find this just a little bit difficult to take.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Will the hon. member (Mr. MacDonald) mind the observation that it is quite possible to have people added to the voters' list, who have been left off, if they are vouched for at the voters' poll? Did the hon. member know that?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if the deputy Prime Minister had not just bounced so quickly—he was taking the words right out of my mouth. I know this argument has been advanced—that there were names added to the voters' list. But I would draw to the attention of the deputy Prime Minister that this is the official report of the general election published months after the general election took place, and I find it just a little incredible that the names which were added on election day would not have been included on the voters' list and therefore in the official results.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, they are not.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I submit, if they did not, it is time we approached this a little bit differently. The voters' list is made up of the names that were put on the voters' list before election day and, obviously, those who are added at election day. Mr. Chairman, I can recognize that this is the only way the government is going to be able to get itself off the hook on this and I would submit that, in future instances, when you have a permanent record of the number of people who had the right to vote in that area you should include at least those who not only had the right to vote but did vote. And their names should be on the record.

However, I will leave the matter there, with this final observation—that I am not persuaded, Mr. Chairman, that the kind of thing of which there is such widespread suspicion with regard to the Kenora riding is confined to the Kenora riding. It is just possible that on some future occasion I will be able to document it, but until that future occasion we will have to leave it.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has raised this very vexing problem, the hon. leader of the Opposition has urged me to make known to the House my personal knowledge of this matter, and I should like to take the opportunity to do so. I observed, when I was journeying up to Kenora, this phenomenon in the returns of the general election in 1959. My research took me back to the election of 1955 and I saw that a quite similar phenomenon had occurred; and, as the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) said today, indeed it is a big province. I do recall getting on the train at one in the morning in Sudbury and at 9 a.m. I was only at Hornepayne; and there at Hornepayne, when I entered the dining car to have breakfast, I met the smiling and benign countenance of that very ingratiating and affable fellow, the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Huron (Mr. MacNaughton). I think he was going on a skiing weekend somewhere, and he and I journeyed westward all day in this large province.

At 5 o'clock I got off the train at Sioux Lookout, having discovered that the hon. Minister without Portfolio was not very good at cribbage and even worse at gin rummy. He went on to Minaki. However, I felt it incumbent upon me to pay a visit to the returning officer, an Irishman by the name of O'Flaherty, who had performed that task in 1959 and I am not sure whether in 1955; I inquired what steps had been taken to enumerate the Indian vote in the nine polls to the north of Red Lake, starting from the farthest north at Bear Skin, Trout Lake, Pigangikum, Trout, Deer and Sachigo Bay, Lac Seul, and he told me that as of that date—and I think that was somewhere just after Christmas—they had not yet enumerated more than one or two.

I queried from him who was doing the enumerating and I was given the name of a man called Green. His name cropped up all over the place after that time—George Green of Red Lake. And I made inquiry—I had made inquiry previously and here is the important point, where I intend to wax very serious to treat a very serious subject. I had inquired about police services, rescue work and any other type of thing that required the use of aircraft, and was told that, universally, The Department of Lands and Forests had provided any aircraft services that were required in those Indian reservations. I inquired of Mr. O'Flaherty why the services of The Department of Lands and Forests were not used to enumerate the Indian vote and in fact to take in the ballot boxes, the election officials and generally to supervise the taking of the vote.

At this point I must say, as a result of correspondence between myself and the chief election officer, Mr. O'Flaherty and I appeared to disagree. However, I think I may be supported by another person who was with me that at the time Mr. O'Flaherty told me, in words that were not subject to any equivocation or ambiguity, that he had been instructed to give the job of the enumerating and taking the vote to Green by the local Conservative organization.

An hon. member: He had done it before and had done a good job.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, exactly. Now just pursuing the research a little further, I made the chief election officer acquainted with these things; just pursuing the thing a little bit further I got in touch with The Department of Lands and Forests officials and ascertained from them that all during the time of the by-election, the enumeration, and the taking of the vote, there was available at Kenora, one Otter aircraft—I believe capable of flying six to eight persons. There was, at Sioux Lookout, a Beaver aircraft, I believe capable of flying an almost equal number of persons. Both were equipped with skis ready for winter flying, and I was told by The Department of Lands and Forests officials that there was no reason in the world that the aircraft could not be available and the necessary personnel be assigned to doing that.

However, in the result we were not too unhappy. The Indians must have been somewhat influenced by our cries for justice, impartiality, fairness, honesty and integrity, because in the result—my hon. friend from Kenora will corroborate me—the Indians voted 276 for Gibson and 272 for Robertson.

Now there was just one other thing and that will sum up the—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): I guess that enumerator was not a Tory; he must have been a Liberal.

An hon. member: That is the end of Green.

Mr. Sopha: Of course, I do not use this place as a forum to make any allegations against Mr. Green at all. I think from the point of view of appearances that in the future it would be much better if an independent person, or The Department of Lands and Forests aircraft, were used, and that such things appear to be done fairly.

Just one other thing, one unusual feature of the Kenora by-election that falls within the purview of the chief election officer. Apparently the name of the Conservative candidate at that time—and I speak only now from the point of view of the nicety of the language and doing things with elegance—his initials were A. R., I think, B. K., or something; but for many years I think, even unknown to his mother, he had been called “Pete.” But nowhere in his Christian names, those names assigned to him, and I suppose registered with the Registrar of Vital Statistics, is there the name Peter, Pierre or Pedro or Pete. He was known throughout the length and breadth of the districts of Kenora and Patricia as “Pete”, and it was the name “Pete” that he insisted on putting on the ballot paper.

Now we had a little argument about that, and messages by radar, radio, telegram and letter flew back and forth with the chief election officer, and I think the chief election officer was got out of bed one night to make a decision about whether he could be identified as “Pete” on the ballot paper, and the chief election officer ruled that he could be.

My plea is this: if we allow a man to put the fairly respectable nickname of “Pete” on the ballot paper when that is not his name, where is it going to stop? Some men might, by their wives, be called “Peaches” or “Snuggles.” I think I looked up the section of the Act at the time and it says that the candidate’s name shall be put on the ballot paper. Well, his name is his legal name, not some of the names his wife calls him, but his legal name. And I would urge upon the chief election officer in the future that these nicknames—that is a great Americanization, you know, to be an American wheel nowadays you have to have a nickname; you have to be called, well, there are all sorts of names—but we should not allow those creeping Americanizations to infiltrate into this British land.

Votes 1603 to 1607, inclusive, agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee of ways and means.

THE BUDGET

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, mine has not been the most frequent voice heard in this House over the past ten years although three times in this past week is somewhat of a record for myself, and I trust that in rising tonight to take part in this debate I will not add to your problems in the delicate task of controlling the decorum of this House. It may be that some of the hon. members opposite will disagree with some of what I have to say. This is as it should be, but I feel that such disagreement should be based on legitimate difference of opinion, and not, as it all too often seems to be, based on a certain penchant to be disagreeable.

I have heard, both inside this House and outside, the claim either stated or implied, that this is an old government. To hear some speakers on this subject, one would think that hardening of the arteries had set in along the Treasury benches. This is very amusing to me when I think that there are only 22 hon. members on either side of this House who were here before the general election of 1951, when the voters of Hamilton-Wentworth sent me here.

There are only five Cabinet ministers who were in the House before that time, and another eight members of the Cabinet entered this House at the same time I did.

We approach the twentieth year of good

Conservative government in Ontario, but we approach it with only two Conservative members who sat in the House before 1943, and another half dozen who entered the House in that year.

According to my rough calculations, the average age of my colleagues who are directing the operations of this government's departments is just a shade over 51 years. How many large companies could boast such a young management team? Some may have a president in his forties, but you will usually find a chairman of the board in his seventies.

Although I happen to be some 40 days older than the chairman of this board, at 45 years of age, I am looking forward to quite a few years before I take to the back fifty.

All of this may seem like a roundabout way of introducing my remarks, but I think it is worthwhile when marking anniversaries, or thinking about the end of the Frost era and the start of the Robarts regime, to look backward as well as forward. After ten years in this House, I cannot help but be impressed by the great changes that have taken place not only within the House but in the province.

This Parliament, as are all parliaments, is always changing, and yet always the same. When I came into this House, I was struck by the way in which the hon. members represented such a thorough cross-section of Ontario. Many of the faces have changed, and yet I feel that that representation is still here.

It has been some years since I have taken the opportunity to say something about Hamilton-Wentworth and some of the problems it has faced and is facing. I shall leave the broad field of municipal government to my colleague, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), and shall deal primarily with the one nearest home—the town of Dundas.

I would like to make it clear at the outset that I am not seeking to take any personal credit for the way Dundas has grown. Much of my information comes from the office of the industrial commissioner, J. C. Don, who has done an excellent job of making the advantages of the town of Dundas known far and wide.

The story of Dundas is typical of many towns and cities that have boomed in the past decade. The area of the town has just about trebled through annexation and the population has jumped from 6,787 in 1951 to 12,790 last year.

I was very interested in the recently published population figures for the province, showing the growth over the past ten years. The census showed there were 6,236,092 persons living in Ontario last year—an increase of 35.6 per cent since 1951. The increase in Dundas' population was something over 88 per cent.

As I said, much of the growth of Dundas was due to annexation, but it is interesting to note that its growth was more than twice as fast as that of the whole province.

Taking the growth from another angle, the total assessed value of all property in Dundas was less than $5 million, and the industrial and commercial portion of this was a little under $1.8 million, ten years ago. Last year, the assessment had jumped to more than $18 million, or some three and one half times as much as it had been a decade earlier, and the industrial and commercial share of this assessment had exceeded $5.25 million.

It is the opinion of some municipal experts that a desirable balance in assessment in a community is roughly 60 per cent residential and 40 per cent industrial and commercial. The above statistics I have quoted for the town of Dundas show a similar picture to what has happened in all too many communities across the province—the percentage of industrial assessment has dropped from 36 in 1951, to a shade under 30 last year.

This trend was reversed last year, with the ratio of increase in industrial assessment being greater than that of residential. A large part of this credit must go to the town itself which established an industrial commission in 1957. Since then, a number of new firms have established in Dundas. I will cite a few names, only to show the variety: Canada Dry Ltd.; Screen Craft Processors; Wentworth Cut Stone; and Knight Industries—among 13 new industries that were established in Dundas recently.

As I said a few moments ago, last year established what we hope will become a trend—the increase of industrial assessment at a more rapid rate than residential assessment. This is a great credit to the local administration.

It has been obvious to anyone who has been observing the Ontario scene for any length of time that the Metropolitan Toronto area has been attracting more than its fair share of industrial and commercial assessment.

I do not know why some municipalities seem to be obsessed with the idea of bigness, and I always get a laugh out of the grudging way in which Toronto admits that Montreal remains Canada's biggest city and shows no signs of losing its lead.

From the number of problems that Metro presents around here, I wonder that the area politicians do not try to solve some of them by discouraging growth instead of encouraging it. I hope Hamilton and Dundas never get one of these growth complexes and start wanting to be "Number One."

In any case, Dundas has been engaged in the same fight that many other small centres next door to large centres have been in.

Thousands of people want to live in the smaller centres but, until recently, all too few industries have been wanting to locate there. The trade and industry branch of The Department of Economics and Development and its predecessors have been assisting, but the magnet of Metro is too strong for most firms to resist.

However, the province has not been sitting idly by. In 1951, provincial grants to Dundas amounted to $81,921; in 1960, these grants had spiralled to $479,344.

For all of Wentworth county, grants in 1951 amounted to $3,466,061, while in 1960 they totalled $13,154,858.

For Dundas alone, the provincial grants in 1951 amounted to about $12 per person; in 1960, the population had almost doubled, but the grants had still gone up almost six times, to leave the grant per capita at about $37.50.

In other words, provincial grants reduce the municipal taxes in the town of Dundas by $150 per year to the head of the average family of four. This is compared to less than $50 that those taxes would have been reduced just 10 years ago.

I shall not go into the welfare and education grants which have eased the tax burden so much, but will leave those fields to other speakers.

Of course, the best way to distribute wealth evenly is through providing equal opportunity to earn, rather than distributing handouts from a central tax source. This government has done an excellent job of redistributing wealth between communities in the form of grants, and has made a start toward distributing the earning power of municipalities through encouraging industry to locate in smaller centres.

I believe it is a goal that can never be reached—the smaller centres can likely never have a relatively equal tax base—but the imbalance can be reduced. This represents a challenge both for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass) and the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr.

Macaulay). If our new economic council does nothing else, encouragement of new industry to locate in the smaller centres throughout Ontario would be a major accomplishment.

I would like to turn now to the work of The Department of Highways in Wentworth county, and before I go any further I would like to endorse what many other hon. members have said in welcome to the new hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) to his portfolio, and in thanks to his predecessor for a job well done. Of course, I have done this privately with both men concerned, but it is not too often that a Cabinet Minister has a chance to do this publicly.

Hamilton has long been the first large city that many visitors from the United States encounter when they come to Canada. There will be more in the near future, with the completion of the bridge at Lewiston, the new highway linking the New York State thruway with the Queen Elizabeth, and the new skyway at Homer. The Burlington skyway has become an accepted part of our landscape now, but I never cease to marvel at the engineering feat and the smooth traffic flow. You would have to have lived in the Hamilton area to fully appreciate what this skyway has meant to us.

Construction of this bridge accounts for a large chunk of the astonishingly high total expended by the provincial government in the Hamilton and Wentworth area. I say astonishing because I was almost floored when I obtained up-to-date figures on what had actually been spent here.

I hasten to assure the hon. Minister of Highways that I am not complaining about his department spending too much money in the area that is nearest my heart. In fact, as I drive around the area, I can see where a lot more money can be spent to good advantage. However, it is amazing that in an area which is among the oldest in the province, our dependence on motor vehicles is such that we must still spend such large sums to prevent the area's economy bogging down in one large traffic jam.

Only six-and-one-half miles of new highway has been added to the provincial system in this area, yet The Department of Highways had to spend only a little less than $40 million for construction and maintenance of the system within Wentworth county in the past 10 years.

And this does not include municipal and county roads in Wentworth on which a little less than $37 million was spent. I ask the hon. members to pause for a moment and think on that fact that—all told—$77 million was spent on providing and maintaining roads of one type or another in a single county, over a ten-year period.

It makes me wonder whether we are driving the cars—or are the cars driving us? The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) is concerned with the problem of impaired drivers; our new economic council might well consider the impairment to our economy that drivers are forcing us into by the unabated pressure of the continued increase in number of motor vehicles and increased use of these vehicles. Since I drive some 35,000 miles every year myself, I plead as guilty as anyone else to adding to this pressure, but after watching asphalt become one of the biggest crops in Ontario—with acre after acre being added each year, not only in our roads systems of the province, but particularly in areas like downtown Hamilton and Toronto—I wonder how long it can go on.

I have got a bit off my subject and perhaps out of my depth in musing on the philosophy of the motor vehicle. To get back to Wentworth county, the area would have been in difficult circumstances without the aid that has come from the province. In 1951-1952, the provincial subsidies going into Wentworth totalled a little more than $800,000. Those subsidies reached $2.3 million last year. The total for the 10-year period was almost $15 million. This is a substantial sum, but if any of the northern Ontario hon. members think it is too much, I would ask them to drive some of the concession lines in my county and compare them with their own northern roads.

There is under way in my riding—at least the important part is in my riding—construction of the latest in the “400” series of highways. The Department of Highways likes to call it No. 403—but I can assure them that around Hamilton it will always be known as the Chedoke expressway. This is one of the most vitally needed urban bypasses yet unfinished in the province. Its present take-off point is Freeman’s Corners at the Queen Elizabeth way. It skirts or cuts through such colourful areas as Snake Road, Mausoleum Curve, Princess Point, Wolfe Island and Cootes Paradise.

The part of the highway that is still known as the Chedoke expressway is six and one-third miles long and is expected to be completed in 1965 at a cost of about $14 million. This will be a great boon to those motorists who wish to bypass Hamilton. At the same time, the new highway will cut through the Royal Botanical Gardens, and it is with a word about these gardens that I should like to conclude my remarks.

The Chedoke expressway brings me, in this speech, as it will bring hundreds of thousands of visitors when it is completed, to the Royal Botanical Gardens. I am afraid I am a most inactive director of these gardens, but I would like to compliment the men who have successfully worked against long odds to establish at Hamilton one of the finest botanical gardens on this continent. It is commonplace for people in the arts and entertainment world to complain that they have to go outside Canada for recognition, but the men who have made the Royal Botanical Gardens must feel like the proverbial prophets without honour in their own country.

It seems to me that the botanical gardens are more highly respected in the United States than in Canada, and are better known outside Ontario than within. The gardens were started in 1941 and war hampered their development. A second phase of development started in 1947 which has quickly brought the gardens international repute. A third phase, I would say will start the completion of the Chedoke expressway.

Combined with the completion of No. 401 highway and the other highways and bridges of which I have spoken, a highways system is being created which brings probably 10 million persons, on either side of the border, within a few hours’ drive of the gardens.

At first, the gardens were almost entirely supported by bequest, and Hamilton money. They still receive up to one-quarter mill from Hamilton. In 1953, this government stepped in and since that time $892,000 in grants have been paid over. I am pleased to see that there is another $100,000 in the budget this year. This is a lot of money, but it is not enough. There are 1,900 acres to maintain and develop, and with no revenue from admission charges the budget is stretched as far as it can go.

Leslie Laking, director of the gardens, provides a definition of what a botanical garden is:

A botanical garden is a hybrid type of organization, combining some of the functions of a university, a museum, and an experimental station, with the informal recreational aspects of a parks system. The tools of a botanical garden—its plant collections—are so employed that they exhibit great aesthetic appeal, along with instructional and inspirational values, as well as existing for their primary scientific purposes.

Many of the hon. members will be aware of the place that the seasonal gardens have won in the field of horticulture. Experts from all over the world have admired the iris display and the tulip variety garden. The rock garden has become a landmark, since it was established years before the Botanical Gardens and incorporated into them. The children's garden has attracted hundreds of youngsters from nine to 16 years from the Hamilton district and established in them a lasting interest in gardening.

The trial garden is a late-comer where new annuals are introduced and their performance recorded. Last year, visitors were able to see flowering plants which have since been given all-America awards and will be introduced next year.

The arboretum, being developed on a magnificent 350-acre site on the north shore of Cootes Paradise, is destined to become the most important area within the Royal Botanical Gardens. This is a long-term development devoted to the culture and display of hardy woody plants. The site has been prepared, roads and parking constructed, a lilac dell virtually completed, and preparations made for the introduction of an extensive demonstration hedge garden this spring. This arboretum has been designed to attract not only the professional, but the home owner in search of information.

To me, what will be one of the most outstanding features is the five wilderness areas with nearly 20 miles of improved nature trails. All in all, these botanical gardens offer more variety and wider scope to a person who just wants to spend a day outdoors than any other single area in southern Ontario. Where else can you find 1,900 acres without "No Trespassing" signs on barbed wire fences, lots of parking and superhighways to the entrance so close to Metro?

In conclusion, I would like to extend to the hon. members of the House two invitations: one is to visit the Royal Botanical Gardens this spring and see all the new developments for themselves; the other is to encourage the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and others who may know someone with funds that they would like to invest in the future to take an especially good look at our botanical gardens.

Mr. P. Hoffman (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, one of the most appealing aspects of participating in this debate is the opportunity it gives me to express my sincere admiration for the dignity and distinction you personally bring to this high office. During the last and present session, I have been deeply impressed with the well earned respect you have commanded. It is indeed a pleasure to observe the esteem in which you are held.

Your tact and superior judgment in dealing with situations inevitably arising from the diversity of opinion expressed in this House would be difficult to emulate. I feel that I speak for all members of the House when I say that your position as Speaker would tax the patience of Job and challenge the restraint of William the Silent. Such admirable qualities as yours, are, unfortunately, all too seldom found and never fully appreciated.

At this time, too, I would like to take the opportunity of extending my congratulations to our hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). Here, sir, I am sure we all agree, is a man who will be acclaimed as one of Ontario's outstanding Prime Ministers. To the newly-elected hon. members of this Legislature, my warm congratulations and best wishes. I know that they will find it a full and rewarding experience.

To the newly-appointed hon. Ministers of the Cabinet, also, my congratulations. While we are aware that the selection has been difficult, we do feel that the hon. Prime Minister has chosen wisely, but in the words of a mother superior who prefers to remain anonymous, may I quote:

Keep me from getting talkative, and particularly from the fatal habit of thinking I must have something to say on every subject on every occasion.

Release me from craving to try to straighten out everybody's affairs.

Keep my mind free from the recital of endless details, and give me wings to get to the point.

And so, Mr. Speaker, as a member for a largely agricultural area, I would like at this time to extend my best wishes to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). We are indeed pleased with the interest the hon. Minister has shown in the agricultural problems in our northern districts, and respectfully draw to his attention several existing conditions which must be considered for modification and correction.

As an editorial in the North Bay Nugget recently pointed out, a tremendous amount of southern Ontario's finest farm land has been taken out of production, chiefly through the construction of new highways and cloverleaves, housing developments, industrial sites and shopping centres—all part of the bursting expansion of this part of the province.

There are no new fields to be plowed in southern Ontario—indeed, far too much sub-marginal land is now being cultivated, and this should be converted to more realistic uses. New productive land is essential and the only area in which it can be found is in northern Ontario. As far as demonstrations of productivity are concerned, northern Ontario is ready to meet the challenge. For 80 years or more, northern Ontario farmers have shown that, for quality and productivity per acre their farms need not fear for comparison with farms in either southern Ontario or in the Canadian west.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that the Timiskaming district is a highly productive agricultural area—covering some 1,800 square miles of fertile farm land. Though this region presents no problem insofar as growth of grain crops is concerned—owing to late summer and early autumn precipitation—the problem of successful harvesting and storage is serious.

Moisture in poorly dried grain reduces the quality from grade 1 to grade 3, with a subsequent loss in the Timiskaming district of roughly $11,000 annually. Grain containing only 2.5 per cent moisture content above the maximum permissible, is responsible for this loss, and I feel keenly that grain-drying equipment is urgently needed in the Timiskaming area.

Recent statistics reveal that there are over 1.44 million bushels of grain produced in this district. While we realize that all grain produced will not necessarily require treatment of drying equipment, a safe margin of 25 per cent would give a minimum of 360,000 bushels of grain requiring this processing annually. Recently the sale of several thousand bushels of oats to a lumbering company in this area was lost because of excessive moisture in the grain; and this is by no means an isolated case. Inferior quality produce is bound to result from lack of proper drying facilities, and consequently places the farmers of the Timiskaming district in an unfavourable marketing situation.

While the use of grain-drying equipment is an entirely new approach in northern Ontario, it cannot and must not be considered experimental. Eighty per cent of the grain in Essex and Kent counties is being processed by this method. While the merit of such equipment is recognized in and by these two counties, it is my contention that such equipment will prove ultimately to be more beneficial in Timiskaming because of the greater precipitation occurring in the northern districts during the harvest season.

Mr. Speaker, we are aware that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) is familiar with this existing condition and is most anxious to arrive at a solution to the problem. Accordingly, after giving thorough consideration to all aspects of the situation, I respectfully offer the following suggestions as means to that end. It is recommended that a suitable drying plant of sufficient capacity to dry a minimum of 3,000 bushels per 24-hour day be purchased and installed at the co-operative plant at New Liskeard.

It is further recommended that The Department of Agriculture examine and provide any financial assistance necessary that may be required by the co-op to finance the purchase and installation of the equipment so badly needed. It is recognized that the return of some $15,000 as investment would not occur in a period of less than five to 10 years. However, because of the potential benefits to the farmers in the Timiskaming district, such calculated risk is well warranted.

In any event, it is my considered opinion that the finalization of such detail can be safely left with the hon. Minister and his highly trained staff of technicians and competent advisers.

Mr. Speaker, as mentioned at the beginning of this report, the district of Timiskaming is largely agricultural. Such being the case, with the sole exception of a closely related issue, my remarks will be confined to agriculture. Probably because of the geographical location of our respective ridings it was gratifying to learn that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), in his debate on the Throne speech, very recently approved, in part at least, a thought that has been uppermost in my mind for some time and which I brought to the attention of the hon. government members in this House at a recent caucus.

You, sir, will recall that at that time, it was my contention that a substantial or full payment of transportation charges should be paid by the government on all fertilizer shipments from the nearest manufacturing plant to the farm where it will be used. May I digress for a moment to point out that all farms are, of necessity, operated under rather rigid budget control? The purchase and transportation of fertilizer are items of considerable importance, and generally the cost is added together.

In brief, a farmer has a budget of, say, any given amount for fertilizing, and must reduce the amount of his purchase correspondingly to cover shipment charges.

During the period 1957-1960, shipments of fertilizer to the Timiskaming district amounted to 484, 659, 792, and 960 tons respectively, totalling 2,895 tons. As the shipping points were not listed in this report, the actual transportation charges cannot be determined. However, it will be readily recognized that the farmers of the Timiskaming district are being penalized to a very considerable degree in comparison to the farmer located in areas where fertilizer plants are located. In a greater or lesser measure, a like situation exists in the districts of Algoma, Kenora, Cochrane, Sudbury, Nipissing, Rainy River and Thunder Bay, and were one to attempt to cover the whole situation he would indeed be guilty of verbosity.

In summarizing, may I express my thanks, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members of this House for their understanding of these vexing problems presently confronting our farm friends in the Timiskaming district. On their behalf I ask the support of the hon. members of this assembly with the hope that they will be able to obtain the man-made equipment to salvage their God-given crops, and secondly that the government will absorb the cost of the shipping charges of fertilizer to this area.

In conclusion, I again quote from the prayer of the mother superior:

I ask for grace enough to listen to the tales of others' problems. Help me to endure them with patience.

Teach me the glorious lesson that occasionally it is possible that I may be mistaken.

Make me thoughtful, but not moody, helpful but not bossy. With my vast store of wisdom, it seems a pity not to use it all—but Thou knowest Lord, that I want a few friends at the end.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, in an atmosphere of prayer and friendliness, which I think is something that we ought to have more of, there is one matter of importance that I want to speak about, and I do it with the object and purpose in mind of not blaming anybody for anything. I am really not mad at anybody. If errors have happened in the past on the part of anyone, that is not what I want to speak about now.

A year ago in April, there occurred a strike at the Royal York Hotel.

Without assessing who may be right or wrong—and I think if we are going to be of any use at all in the final settlement of this strike, we have got to be neutral, and that is exactly what I intend to be—there is no question in my mind, and I do not think that there is any question in the minds of any of the hon. members here, but that a strike really does not help anybody.

I understand, as you all do, that there are times that these things must happen. But instead of a strike cooling off, it sometimes gets hotter, and if we in this House who are the top authority of the province, if we speak about this strike in a heated attitude, in a time of argument, instead of trying to finally settle this strike, we may be adding only more flames to that fire. We may find ourselves having a hard time putting out the ashes that will, I think, smoulder for a long time after this strike has been settled.

There is no question in my mind, sir, that there rests here in the hands of hon. members, ample power to settle this strike. If there is not ample power, then we as a body can pass the type of Act which is needed in order that this strike may be settled. I think it would be well if we did everything we could to take party politics out of this. There have been a number of well meaning men who have made some trials to settle this strike, and they apparently have failed. I am going to offer a suggestion which I hope will meet with the approval of the House. I suggest that the hon. Premier of the province (Mr. Robarts), the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. leader of the NDP Party—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): "P" stands for "party." "NDP," not "NDP Party."

Mr. Reaume: Well, whatever you are. I want to reiterate that the last thing I am trying to do, is to get into any arguments with anybody, even my hon. friend.

I think that these three men, these three honourable men, should call a meeting in the Parliament buildings, and invite to this meeting the top notch officers of both the company involved and the union. I am not making the statement that they could, in the course of a half-hour, bring the strike to an end, but I am saying that I feel they can pave the way.

These three men represent all the public opinion in the province. Strikes either die or breed pretty well on public opinion, and I can think of no three men in the province who can bring more public opinion to a meeting than the three that I have mentioned. I am pleading with the hon. Prime Minister. I am not going to take any sides; I have seen, in my day, many strikes the ashes of which have smouldered for months and even years after they were finally settled.

This is a strike that concerns all the people of the province. You always find one pattern followed. The company takes the side, of course, of the interest of the company. On the other hand, the union—and quite properly so—is fighting in the interests of the union. But, may I ask the hon. members of the House, who is fighting for the people, all the people? Who is fighting for the people of the province?

I should think—in fact I know—that the former hon. Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Frost) quite properly tried, the former hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) made some overtures and the present hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) made some overtures, and a member of the control board here in the city has made a try. Apparently all this has failed. Now where can they go? To whom can the people appeal? To whom are they looking?

Mr. Speaker, I want to say again that there is no higher power in the province than right here. I think not only that we ought to be anxious to move forward and do something about it; I think it is a duty and an obligation on our part. I certainly hope that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald) will join their hands, their hearts and their minds. This might be the very first time it ever happened, but I think that if they do, and if they erase any semblance of hatred from their hearts, if they will take a neutral stand, if they will invite the heads of the company and do not let them send any office boys—and similarly invite the heads of the union and have them send no office boys—I think that, in this way, these hon. gentlemen can bring back to us, they must bring back, an answer. And if they have not the power to settle it finally, at present, then the House is now in session and the power can be given them. An answer must be found and I think by the help of God and the efforts on the part of the three hon. gentlemen that I have named, I think that they can handle the problem and, by all means, keep it out of politics.

Mr. J. A. C. Auld (Leeds) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had anticipated that there would be more speakers available for the budget debate, but apparently we have no one else who is ready. Tomorrow we will go on with the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development. And we will meet at 2 p.m. tomorrow and rise at 5 p.m., and I so move.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 1962

The House met at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery the University of Waterloo, Waterloo; Lynnwood Heights Public School, Agincourt and Yeshiva Shlomei Emunei Israel Private School, Toronto; and in the west gallery, Power Glen Public School, St. Catharines.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the proceedings of the day, I would like to introduce two people to the House. We are privileged to have with us today Miss Edith G. Firth, who is authoress of the documentary volume entitled "The Town of York, 1793-1815", a copy of which is on each hon. member's desk.

With Miss Firth is Professor J. B. Conacher of the Champlain Society.

Before I introduce Miss Firth and Professor Conacher who is here with her, may I point out that this is the fifth volume in the Ontario sponsored series born out of the arrangement that the hon. member for Victoria and former Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Frost) made some half-dozen years ago.

The first volume in this series was "The Valley of the Trent" by Edwain C. Guillet; the second, "Royal Fort Frontenac" by Richard A. Preston and Dr. Leopold Lemontagne; the third, "Kingston Before the War of 1812" by Dr. Richard A. Preston; the fourth, "The Windsor Border Region" by Rev. E. J. Lajeunesse; and now, "The Town of York, 1793-1815."

In the course of preparation are two additional volumes. One is on the Muskoka-Haliburton region and the other is on the valley of the Grand River. Other volumes dealing with other parts of the province are presently in the planning stage.

Under the arrangements made with the Champlain Society, the province pays for the cost of publication which includes distribution to the members of the Champlain Society, plus an additional 1,200 to 1,500 copies of the Ontario volume for public or general distribution. Printing and distribution are carried out through the University of Toronto Press.

Miss Firth, this charming Lindsay-born authoress to whom we are paying our respects today, is head of the Canadian history and manuscript section of the Toronto Public Library. Through several other works she has established herself as one of Ontario's leading authorities on early Canadian history. Her newest documentary volume which deals with the beginning of this great metropolis and capital city of our province, represents over three years of work on her part in collecting and editing material from the Toronto Public Library, the public archives in Ottawa, the Ontario archives, and many other libraries and historical societies in Canada and the United States.

Miss Edith Firth has searched deeply into the old records for her book, framing it within the period of Simcoe's arrival in 1793 and the time the news of peace reached York in the spring of 1815. Her persuasive and lucid style of writing, together with her meticulous selection of relevant and supporting documents, is certain to receive acclaim.

It is a book which will appeal, not only to the professional historian, but to all persons who take an interest in the early traditions and customs of our way of life in this province. She graphically illustrates why York was chosen for settlement in the first place, the kind of community that was developing and the effect of the War of 1812 on its social, religious, and business structure. Many interesting topics are encompassed in her book, such as the problems of defence, commercial development, local government, administration of justice, communications, politics, religion, and education.

In fact, many of the problems that are bothering us today were problems of consequence and moment in the life of the province back in the days covered by this volume. Thus this book entitled "The Town of York" is a most worthy successor to the four earlier works of this series prepared under the joint sponsorship of the Champlain Society and the Ontario government.

Dr. Conacher is the general editor of the Champlain series and has at all times been a continuing source of wisdom and experience in developing these books. We deeply regret that the editor of the Ontario series, Professor White, who is at present doing historical research abroad, could not be with us today. Professor White was closely associated with Miss Firth in the selection of content and in making arrangements for publication with the University of Toronto Press. We are deeply indebted to all of them, and of course, particularly to Miss Firth, for their unselfish devotion. We are grateful to all of you for contributing yet another chapter in Ontario's absorbing history.

Miss Firth and Dr. Conacher.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's sixth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr18, An Act respecting the Township of Nepean.

Bill No. Pr33, An Act respecting the United Church of Canada.

Bill No. Pr34, An Act respecting the Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting Hamilton Civic Hospitals.

Bill No. Pr36, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill, having been withdrawn, be not reported:

Bill No. Pr9, An Act respecting the County of Halton.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on the following bills:

Bill No. Pr9, An Act respecting the County of Halton.

Bill No. Pr33, An Act respecting the United Church of Canada.

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River), from the standing committee on mining, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. 57, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ENERGY ACT

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Energy Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is a procedural bill and clarifies a certain number of points in the present Act. I think it would be far better if we dealt with it on second reading, and in committee, actually. It clarifies certain definitions and deals with a number of procedural matters affecting the department's administration.

THE PLANNING ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I might say that this is a bill which introduces many improvements, I should hope, to The Planning Act, including recognizing the county as a designated municipality to allow for committees of adjustment where there are zoning by-laws without any official plan, and with respect to certain procedural matters before committees and before the Ontario Municipal Board. I think that it also can best be discussed on second reading and in committee. It will go to the committee on municipal law.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The sixth annual report of the Ontario Highway Transport Board of the province of Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1961.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I ask my hon. friend, the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), if arising out of the discussion in the House last night in relation to the Royal York strike, has my hon. friend issued an invitation to the parties to come together on the invitation of the Legislature as a whole? And if he has not, does he intend to invite the parties for that purpose?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have had no notice of this question, but the answer to the first half of it is no, I have not. In answer to the second half, I have not given any consideration to so doing.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to advise the House of the appointment of the chairman and two members of the Ontario Police Commission, which is established under the amendment to The Police Act passed by this assembly in December, 1961.

I am pleased to inform the House that His Honour Judge Bruce J. S. Macdonald, OBE, ED, QC, judge of the county and district courts of Ontario, has accepted the full-time appointment of chairman of the commission. He will be on leave of absence from his judicial responsibilities.

He will be joined by Major-General Herbert A. Sparling, CBE, DSO, CD, who will retire shortly as General Officer Commanding Central Command of the Canadian Army; and Mr. Thomas J. Graham, who is well known to the hon. members of this House and who has had very broad experience as an officer of the Toronto Police Department, as a municipal councillor and as a public spirited businessman. Both of these gentlemen will serve on the commission in a part-time capacity.

When the legislation establishing this important commission was before the House during the fall, I said that we intended to appoint a body that would be outstanding in ability, experience and integrity. I am sure all hon. members will agree with me that this objective has indeed been met in the gentlemen who have accepted appointment. I may say that I am delighted with the personnel of the commission. They have undertaken a large and vital responsibility and I am confident that they will do a very good job for the people of Ontario.

Hon. members will recall that their powers and duties, in the broadest sense, are as follows:

1. To inquire into any matter relating to the maintenance of law and order in Ontario.
2. To insure that local municipalities, responsible for their own policing, discharge that responsibility by providing adequate and proper police service within a municipality.

3. To inquire into the administration of any police force or the conduct of any police officer.

4. To suspend or terminate the appointment of any special constable.

5. To supervise the operation of the Ontario Provincial Police Force and to enter into agreements, with the approval of the Attorney-General, to provide local municipalities with provincial police service where the circumstances warrant it and at an agreed fee.

6. To report each year to the Legislature upon the affairs of the commission.

In short, the commission, in addition to supervising the affairs of the Ontario Provincial Police, will play a general watch-dog role over law observance and enforcement in Ontario, to the end that our province will always be an unhealthy place for crime and criminals.

Judge Macdonald has a lengthy and distinguished record in the field of criminal investigation and prosecution. He was born in Nova Scotia in 1902. He graduated from the University of Alberta and studied at Harvard Law School, being called to the bar of Alberta in 1927 and of Ontario in 1928. He was city solicitor of Windsor from 1930 to 1937 and served as counsel for Windsor in the amalgamation proceedings in 1935.

Judge Macdonald became an officer of the Essex Scottish Regiment in 1929 and was commanding officer of the regiment from May, 1943, until July, 1944, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He led the regiment during its early fighting in Normandy. From August, 1944, until May, 1945, he was the Canadian member of the Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force court of inquiry on war crimes and president of the court during its last three months. He served as Officer Commanding, First Canadian War Crimes Investigation Unit, and chief prosecutor of war criminals for the Canadian Armed Forces, his most notable prosecution being that of S.S. Major-General Kurt Meyer. Demobilized in June of 1946, he was awarded the OBE and French Croix de Guerre. He practised his profession in Windsor until 1951 when he became Crown attorney for the county of Essex and then was appointed to the bench.

Major-General Sparling, 54, has had a wide experience in military and diplomatic service. A graduate of Royal Military College and Dalhousie University, he began his military career with the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery and from 1934 until 1937 was instructor in gunnery in Winnipeg. Subsequently, he was attached to national defence headquarters in Ottawa and later attended staff college at Camberley, England. He went overseas in 1940 as brigade major with the Second Canadian Division Artillery and in 1942 he assumed command of the 13th Canadian Field Regiment, RCA, serving later in Sicily and Italy as brigadier in command of the divisional artillery of the Fifth Canadian Armoured Division. In 1944, he was appointed corps artillery commander of the First Canadian Corps in Italy and northwest Europe. He returned to Canada to command the divisional artillery of the Canadian Army, Pacific force. Upon the disbanding of this force in 1945, he returned to Europe and served in the Canadian Army occupation force in Germany.

He subsequently became District Officer Commanding Military District No. 2, Toronto, and from 1947 to 1949 was commander of the western Ontario area. In 1950, he attended the Imperial Defence College, London, England, and was promoted Major-General. He was vice-chief of the General Staff, Canadian Army, from 1950 to 1955, then chairman of the Joint Staff, Washington, DC, until 1958, when he became General Officer Commanding Central Command, with headquarters at Oakville.

Thomas J. Graham was born in Toronto in 1914. He attended St. Clare's Separate School, Vaughan Road Collegiate and St. Michael's College. In 1937, he joined the Toronto City Police Department and, in 1941, on leave from the police department, he became a special investigator in the RCAF. Returning to the Toronto force in 1944, Mr. Graham was one of the original members of the Toronto Police accident squad. In 1947, he left the force, entering the hardware and appliance business.

He was elected to North York township council in 1953 and served as deputy reeve in 1954 and 1955. He sat in the Legislature as member for York Centre from 1955 until 1959. As a member of North York council, Mr. Graham acted as chairman of the police committee which re-organized the North York force prior to its absorption into the Metropolitan Toronto force. Under his chairmanship, the North York force was increased from 50 to 200 men, two new police stations were opened and a police training programme was instituted. In 1957, as a member of the Legislature, he was appointed to the special commission which reviewed the operation of the Metropolitan system in the Toronto area. In 1956, he became president and general manager of Domus Engineering Company Limited, Toronto. He sold his interest in the firm in 1958 and subsequently entered the construction business in association with several firms building apartment projects in the Toronto area.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair, and the House resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

On vote 301:

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Commerce and Development): Mr. Chairman, several days before the budget was delivered, I started on the estimates of this department by delivering what was the economic statement for the year 1961 just completed. Now with the indulgence of hon. members I would like to speak for a few minutes about the programme, the economic programme of the government of Ontario for this coming year, after which no doubt the Opposition parties will follow and then we will proceed into the actual votes where I will deal with the details.

Mr. Chairman, in asking this Legislature to vote as I am today, $5,593,000 on ordinary account and $5.6 million for capital facilities for the 1962-1963 operations of The Department of Commerce and Development, there are a number of points I would like to have the House consider. I shall present the 20-point economic trade programme for 1962.

There can be no doubt we are facing challenging times. The world is in a state of flux, where abrupt changes in international affairs have forced every nation to revise its thinking. This is particularly noticeable in world trading patterns, which are undergoing immense revision. The emergence of trading blocs, though they be thousands of miles away, will affect all of us in Ontario—our production, our labour, our markets, and the future of our province and our country.

When I presented my economic statement to the House some two weeks ago, I did so in an effort to provide information and background for the budget debate to all of the hon. members of this Legislature in our current economic situation. I believe, as I am sure do all of the hon. members, that a well informed Legislature is a good Legislature.

In this statement, I outlined some of the problems our economy will have to solve if we are to obtain a high rate of economic growth in Ontario. I am going to list a number of points or courses of action that the government of Ontario feels will aid the people of our province in meeting the challenges of this decisive decade.

Let me first state that we do not consider any one of these points to be sacred; if study or practice show they are not succeeding, we will not hesitate to discard or modify them. If, on the other hand, a course of action proves promising, we will support it. Of course, we will always be ready to adopt new points or courses of action as circumstances warrant.

When this administration decided to embark on a course of action for the 1960s, it decided as a matter of policy to attempt to utilize the skills, knowledge, abilities and public spirit of people from all occupations and social and economic groups within this province. We believe that these people from all walks of life who are directly concerned in everyday life with the problems that face this government and country, have much to contribute to the general welfare of their province. We are determined to avail ourselves of their skills and public spirit, and we are doing this through the Ontario Economic Council. This is the first plank in our economic programme.

The stated purpose of the Ontario Economic Council is to stimulate all phases of economic development and bring labour, management, agriculture and government together in a working unit or partnership.

This is an accurate, but colourless way to describe what we have in mind. What we actually have in mind is the effective mobilization of the innate human resources of our people. In economic affairs, people like to talk of investment, automation, new methods, monetary policy, and so on. It is good that these things should be discussed and analyzed. After all, knowledge is power, just as the truth will make us free.

However, when all is said and done, these things count for little unless driven on powered by the will to win. The lesson of history which we are applying is that the best methods in the world avail little unless we mobilize our human resources, of which we have plenty of the best.

We know here that a complex industrial society requires a dynamic unity, that something extra beyond the cold figures and the application of new methods can be nullified by the feeling that we are not all involved in a common enterprise. This then is the first plank of our economic programme relating to the Ontario Economic Council.

The second plank of our economic programme relates to an undertaking which we have begun some months ago of a three-part survey of the operations and future prospects of the Ontario Northland Railway, with a view to ascertaining its future. The results of this survey will be applied in fact in the programme which I shall tell the House of later.

This survey is being carried out by most eminent and capable men; Mr. Blair, former vice-president of the CNR, who is studying the operation of the railway and its equipment; Professor MacDougall of Queen's University, who is studying the economic status of the railway and its impact on our northland; and by Price Waterhouse and Company, which is studying the railway's financial structure.

The results of these studies, Mr. Chairman, will aid us immeasurably in undertaking a programme for the development of our north, our province and our people.

Our third plank to aid in the economic development in the province, and in particular, northern Ontario, deals with a $7.2 million extension of our Ontario Northland Railway communications system.

This programme will provide the kind of communications system no modern economy can do without. Better communications enable more work to be done at lower cost. A modern economy cannot advance in one direction only, and this modern network, leading to greater volume of traffic and direct telephone dialing, is no more or less important as food supplies and sewage facilities to the advance of our northern economy. In a word, this is one of the essential basic investments we have to make.

As a fourth plank, we have decided to intensify our efforts in the field of basic and applied research.

Research, perhaps more so today than at any time in our past, is the key to the future. We cannot afford to neglect it and we will not.

In this field we have strengthened and improved the governing board of the Ontario Research Foundation.

A major long-term expansion is under study to set up a satellite community on research in the Toronto area. The estimated cost of this new research centre will be $9 million. We expect it to be completed in 1964 and a number of industries have expressed interest. The Toronto area was selected because of its central location and proximity to universities and other technical facilities.

In this connection, a committee of the economic council has been established to study the involved problem of industrial research and to recommend policies related to it.

This committee is necessary to see that the increased amounts to be spent on research are well spent. We have to co-ordinate two objectives: increase per capita research expenditures to a level comparable with that of other leading industrialized countries, and increase these expenditures judiciously and profitably, rather than indiscriminately.

With this reorganization and extension of services and facilities, we believe we have made a good start—a start, incidentally that should do much to encourage and retain those skilled people our country needs.

As a further aid to research and our fifth plank, I am asking the House in these estimates to increase our grants to the Ontario Research Foundation and to make additional grants in aid of special studies we feel will aid our economy.

These grants will lead to greater productivity throughout our economy. Research is the key to modern progress. At one time, 100 or even 50 years ago, new products, better ways of doing things, came almost by accident or as the result of the efforts of a few devoted scientists. Now, to keep up with our competitors, we have to organize our inventive genius. This effort will touch all sectors of our economy and all parts of the province. To name but a few projects, this programme will investigate cellulose utilization, spruce bark utilization for oil-well drilling muds, non-metallic uses of uranium, hydrogenation of fats and oils, and many others.

This government has always believed in northern Ontario. Our north is Ontario's frontier and we believe in opening up frontiers.

During the last 18 years, the economy of northern Ontario has developed as it did not in any other period of our history. We intend to accomplish as much in the next ten years as has been done in the last two decades.

Our sixth plank is to aid our development in the north in the creation of a northern Ontario development committee.

The need for a special body to consider the needs of northern Ontario becomes apparent if we consider how different that region is from the region in which most of us live. Northern Ontario and southern Ontario are in many ways as different as oil and water. Our northland is bigger than Texas, with a fraction of the population. It has a small agricultural base and huge mineral and forest resources. It depends heavily on such industries as pulp and paper, mining and tourism. These activities are heavily dependent on outside markets, or economic forces largely outside Ontario's control. In view of this we realize that we have not merely to be as good as our competitors, we have to be better.

Since we firmly believe we can achieve this, not merely part of the time, but most of the time, if not all of the time, we feel that this Northern Ontario Development Committee is an all-important first step and we intend to organize for victory in this connection.

We want to look at the question of liaison between the north and the south and how this can best be accomplished. We are concerned about rate and cost differentials and availability of finances. We want to find out how one-industry municipalities can be diversified. We would like to strengthen the economy of Manitoulin Island and we want to study every possible way to bring this about.

Although some people forget this nowadays, agriculture is the basic first industry of our economy as it always has been. As our seventh plank—and no programme to further our development would be effective without it—and as a supplement to the great work of The Department of Agriculture, and in close co-operation with it, an agricultural committee of the economic council has been formed to consider certain aspects of our agriculture industry.

A new approach often achieves results. Many of the men and some of the facilities of The Department of Commerce and Development can quickly spot possible markets for our agricultural products. For example, in the last two weeks in my own portion of the department we have been able to take part in negotiations for the sale of a substantial volume of an important agricultural product running into several millions of dollars. Negotiations are still in progress. This is a new market, a new country, and I am confident that we have great prospects of disposing of it. I am sorry that I am not able to disclose to the House the nature of it, but because of the negotiations and the size of it, I think hon. members will realize that if this matter is pulled off, they will realize it was a most important one, and this is why it could not be discussed at this time.

In conjunction with our many projects, I would like our people to keep agriculture in mind at all times. Frankly speaking, I believe that we, with the wealth of talent that we have been able to assemble in our committees and departments, can do this. Studies will relate to markets, finance, methods, exports and so forth.

The eighth plank relates to housing. This government strongly believes in social progress. The improvement of our living standards is part and parcel of our ever increasing progress. The two are interrelated. We cannot have the one without the other. This is why we have begun a new, 12-point housing programme, which I can refer to in greater detail if the House wishes me to do so at the time we come to that specific vote in the estimates.

The dollar value of the programme is not nearly as important at this stage as the prospects which it holds out to us for our people. I am confident that this new approach to housing, when fully in swing, will not only be of assistance to the housing industry and our general economy, but will make great strides in alleviating social inequalities and helping to lift the standards of our people to acceptable levels.

Our ninth plank relates to retraining of part of our labour force. I readily acknowledge that retraining is fundamentally the responsibility of The Department of Education and, to an extent, The Department of Labour. On the other hand, I do not believe that we can divorce the strength of the economy from the capacity and training of the labour force.

There is an imaginative and highly expansive and expensive retraining programme underway in Ontario. The problems of retraining are immense. Before automation, a man could select a trade and without much general education be confident that he could earn his living so long as he wished to work at that trade. With the progress of automation, this prospect is no longer so assured. Today, we must be able to retrain those who come to Ontario as well as those who, for one reason or another, have need of another trade.

Fundamental to retraining is the general education of our people. To teach a man a trade who cannot read or write with facility or calculate simple mathematical problems is to accomplish little in the long run. With only a facility at one trade, a man is vulnerable to changes in techniques and automation, and he may very well again be out of work unless he has some general education with which to assist himself even within his own job opportunity. Therefore, we intend to establish a study relating to automation and retraining to see what we can do in this department to assist in the preparation of our labour force initially and in its retraining to prepare it for that which will be demanded of it.

We wonder, for example, whether it might be desirable to begin a programme which would open up one or more closed army camps which would be properly equipped, and to which could be sent persons to be retrained who are interested in retraining, and where they would be housed for a number of months much as we were in the army.

We feel that we must look at this problem perhaps from a different light than has been the traditional approach. We would have to give consideration to the support of a man's family, if any, as well as to his own support during this period. In any event, our study will relate to retraining in co-operation with the committees and departments now concerned with it. It is our intention to look at the problem of retraining, not as educators, but as persons who are dedicated to the conviction that we must have a mobile and flexible work force.

As we all realize, skilled labour and a skilled people are one of the most essential prerequisites to economic progress. In fact, I would go farther and say that unless the jurisdiction possesses a monopoly of natural resources, which, of course, we in Ontario do not, education gives that edge, that fractional advantage which enables us not merely to draw a little ahead, but to win the game; as far as the economic game can ever be won.

This government, as a vital part of our programme for economic progress, is going to undertake a study of the demand and availability of required labour and management skills in the light of actual and anticipated changes in our economy. From this study the appropriate conclusions will be drawn and action taken.

But let me emphasize this: there is no simple answer to this problem. The solution lies in the success of a large number of actions by groups from all walks of life, including, of course, the person whose skill is in questionable demand.

Our tenth plank relates to industrial incentives. Today, there are many devices which enlightened government can operate to encourage industry without interfering in its internal workings. Although the province, by virtue of The BNA Act, cannot directly effect changes in the monetary system, rates of interest, tariffs or conditions of foreign trade, we can by means of an enlightened taxation policy set the conditions which will encourage progress.

A special committee on industrial incentives and inducements will study, among others, the following subjects:

1. Remission of corporation taxes to companies which: (a) increase their exports compared to their exports in a given base period; (b) make factory shipments in excess of their shipments for a given base period; (c) make capital expenditures in excess of their capital expenditures for a given base period.

This reduction of the tax on companies making specified percentage increases in the above regards would act as a stimulus to aggressive firms but would not act as an umbrella for the less efficient.

This type of approach could be used to encourage initiative in developing new products, improving industrial design, using a greater percentage of Canadian raw materials in any given product, encouraging research, helping areas of high unemployment, and encouraging exporters to fabricate their products to a higher degree than formerly.

In addition, the committee will study the ideas of subsidized services, and of an Ontario development fund.

These are not matters for precipitate action, but for careful study on which to base decisive action.

One of the essential prerequisites for economic progress is cheap and plentiful energy. Where there are ample and cheap supplies of energy, there is a high standard of living. Ontario has always had ample supplies of cheap energy despite its lack of certain essential fuels. We intend to maintain this position, and, in furtherance of our aims, we are going to amalgamate financially the three Ontario hydro-electric systems. This is our eleventh plank.

In the past there have been amalgamations within the area which today comprises the southern Ontario system, and the benefits anticipated at the time these amalgamations took place have been realized. So now, we propose to amalgamate the three existing systems, the southern, northeastern and north-western, to realize further benefits. In effect, we are proposing to amalgamate one medium-sized electrical utility system with two small systems to make one large, strong and stable system.

As a result, we shall be able to achieve economies in administration, eliminate anomalies from the very complex problem of costing electricity within and among the regions, and provide a large degree of protection from fluctuation in rates to consumers, particularly in the north, where basic industries are heavily dependent upon markets subject to boom and recession. We shall be able to develop the resources of all regions more economically by providing a market for all hydro developments as soon as they are completed. In the long term, rates will be lower than they would otherwise have been. The effect upon rates will be little or none at present, but amalgamation will hold down increases for the future.

Our twelfth plank relates to the creation of a committee of the economic council to study the tourist industry. One of the problems noted in my economic statement was the size of our balance-of-payments deficit. While increased exports will aid in cutting down this deficit, the non-merchandise or money side of our balance-of-payments situation must also be tackled. One of the goals of the committee on tourism will be to attract more foreign tourists to Ontario and at the same time encourage Ontario and Canadian citizens to vacation here. If such a goal is realized our present deficit on tourist account could be turned into a surplus.

Some of the subjects to be studied by the committee on tourism will be the development of suitable attractions and facilities, camping sites, historical sites, advertising, domestic and foreign, government aid and services, liquor policy, financial assistance through an Ontario development fund, and other matters.

The committee on tourism will draw heavily for its members upon people engaged in the tourist industry in Ontario.

Our thirteenth plank relates to the study of the advisability of creating an Ontario development fund.

The availability of capital for business enterprises of all descriptions is one of the key determinants of economic progress. Our existing financial enterprises have all made tremendous contributions and undoubtedly will continue to do so. Nevertheless, as a part of our far-reaching economic programme for the sixties, we intend, through the Ontario Economic Council, to investigate the need for an Ontario development fund.

Such a fund might loan money to industry for sites, buildings, machinery and equipment, and guarantee loans by non-profit municipal industrial development groups. In addition, the fund committee would study federal fiscal and monetary policy as it relates to encouraging capital investment in Ontario industry, and in general study the factors affecting business growth, such as availability of foreign capital, business taxation and financial inducements to growth.

For example, are there sufficient financial means within the conventional loaning institutions for expanding industry? If not, in what areas is there a shortage? Are these areas in which we wish to encourage development?

What kind of development do we want to encourage? Why has it not taken place otherwise? Also, if we are to create an Ontario development fund, what are the methods for establishing it? Should it be co-operative with industry and is there any way of infusing public participation—by way of bonds or other holdings in a fund in the hands of the public? Such a fund could exceed $100 million.

If such a fund were created, it could be used to assist in the creation of new industry and the expansion and development of existing industry, and it could help to retain the family farm and expand the tourist industry.

This is a proposal in which I have long believed and advocated for some time. But before any such programme is undertaken, it must be very carefully scrutinized.

Canadians today import more per capita than any other people in the world. We in this government do not believe in this day and age that we can best stimulate our economy and improve the standard of living by engaging in campaigns for high tariffs. In fact, the record shows that our strongest companies, those that compete not only in Canada but throughout the world, deplore high tariffs because they feel that such action shuts more doors than it opens.

There is much the government of Ontario believes can be done to assist materially the manufacturing sector of the economy. One field looks particularly promising: the field of import replacement. Our fourteenth plank relates to what we call the fabrication gap.

Fabrication gaps mean that we are importing from outside of Ontario or outside of Canada tremendous quantities of goods, many of which can well be manufactured in Ontario.

We have a booklet which we will be distributing to the hon. members of the House, Mr. Chairman, which shows what these gaps are, but we have to take a new approach toward this matter. Our new programme, in relation to these imports which can be manufactured in Ontario, is to aggressively attempt to replace them.

We can do this by manufacturers' agencies and by an aggressive policy of education in our Ontario industry.

In Canada we import $236 per capita, while the UK and Germany import about $50 per capita. The US imports only $32 per capita.

It is fair to assume that this average rate per capita applies also in Ontario. With approximately 6 million people, if we can cut that down by only $50 per person, we can do $300 million more business in Ontario in a year. This would provide jobs for 30,000 people, based on the general belief that $10,000 worth of business creates one job in industry.

I am sorry the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) is not following me on this point because it is of great significance.

There is utterly no sense in assuming that any industrial woes we have or any unemployment we possess is because we do not have enough industry in Ontario. This is only part of the problem. A large part of the problem exists because we have unused capacity, and we do not need people to man this unused capacity. We are letting other people manufacture the goods that we consume rather than manufacturing them ourselves.

The point of view of this government is simply this: that we, the people of this province, can lift our economy to the highest level if we have the courage to make a few sacrifices, the intelligence to make a few plans, and then the determination to execute them.

We intend to increase our efforts in the field of import replacements, and as a start we are going to hold a conference on fabrication gaps. Through this conference we hope to stimulate Ontario manufacturers to fill these gaps. These conferences, we hope, will not only stimulate manufacturers, but will also aid and assist government, business and the public to better understand each other's problems and develop new techniques to find new products and markets.

In its expanded capital expenditure programme, the Ontario government will ensure, as it has in the past, maximum consideration for goods of Canadian manufacture.

Some hon. members of this House might not realize this, but an important fabrication gap in the Canadian economy was closed last year. This was done by the national oil policy, which displaced most foreign oil products from the Ontario market and which led to the construction of a large new oil refinery in Ontario.

As our fifteenth plank, we propose to set up a markets division in the trade and industry branch, which will specialize in market studies of fabrication gaps and of foreign markets and will draw to the attention of Ontario manufacturers opportunities that exist in provincial, national and world trade.

Such a division, in my view, could do the vital study work so essential to such projects as trade missions abroad and the programme for closing fabrication gaps and judgment of proposals for the Ontario development fund. Moreover, the markets division would assist the government and industry to judge trends, work closely with our trade officers and free them from much routine work, and assist the department in judging important new areas in which to place new trade offices or open offices.

Our sixteenth plank relates to trade missions. We have been much too content in Ontario to let the world knock on our doors. After the last war, in fact, the world did come to knock on our doors to buy from us, but now the world is knocking on our doors to sell to us. As I have already pointed out today, a large part of our economic salvation will rest upon increased exports, improved quality and advance design. We therefore intend to send to Europe a trade group some of whom will be members of the economic council, some of whom will be representatives of industries and organizations across this province. When such a trade group reaches Europe, it will fan out to go to prearranged locations where contacts can be made and negotiations for trade and market sampling carried out. When these people return to Canada, they will report to the economic council and to this department, and they will consist of the council's contact with their specific industry in Europe and Canada.

We believe that we can sell in Europe. We can even sell radios in Japan. But we have got to get off our own doorstep to do it. I contemplate that this trade group will be followed up by another to South America and perhaps one to Asia.

Our seventeenth plank relates to our foreign offices. We are adding to our staff in our offices in Chicago, New York and London. We are strengthening the specific responsibilities of these offices and changing the emphasis from that of attracting new industry to increasing our sales beyond our own jurisdiction with a continued attention to the challenge of introducing new industry from abroad to Ontario.

Our eighteenth plank has been in progress now for several days. It relates to the creation of a trade office in Europe to service the new European economy and to augment that which is carried out by Ontario House on the continent.

A member of the staff of the department has been despatched to Europe, and is now making an on-the-spot survey to determine the most suitable location for new European trade offices.

We will be working in close co-operation with the trade commissioners of The Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa. After all, that department is mostly concerned with the bringing of industry to Canada, as a whole, and, although this is of vital importance to us, we also want to have trade brought to Ontario.

Our nineteenth plank is related to manufacturers' co-operative agencies.

We also plan to study the value of co-operative or common agencies to foster the export of products from small and medium-sized Ontario companies. A co-operative agency is, in effect, a sales agency located in the US or abroad, which sells the products of a number of Ontario manufacturers who jointly support the agency, with or without government financial assistance.

The problem is that many of our small industries are unable to financially support roving trade people on their own, or sales managers in Europe or other places where markets are developing. We feel they can make a modest contribution which, in co-operation with other companies, would enable a small group of manufacturers to actually have a trade representative in other countries in the world.

It must be emphasized that we are fundamentally interested in stimulating all possible exports, not so much for balance-of-payments reasons, but for employment reasons. If a Canadian good or a service, such as insurance or tourism, is sold abroad or to foreign nationals, much more employment per dollar of sales is created in Canada than if imports are sold here.

Not only is employment created directly, but the Canadian manufacturer buys goods and services here, and those who sell to him employ goods and services in their turn. One export dollar may lead to as much as three dollars of business and employment for Canadians. With imports, the balance runs the other way. Imports have many economic advantages, but a heavy import surplus discourages employment here. This balance must be redressed, and in fact this has been started.

We plan a number of co-operative manufacturers' agencies.

We will approach, through the department, a number of Ontario manufacturers, either with vertical lines of production or horizontal lines of production, and, having assembled a number of these—let us say 10 manufacturers—an agent will be appointed either from the department or outside of the department, and supported by these industries, he will go forth into Europe and other trade areas to obtain orders and sell our products.

It is entirely possible, in co-operation with the manufacturers of Ontario, that we may be able to locate several product show-rooms in various trade areas of the world. There are many other exciting prospects in this field.

We have much to learn from the Japanese, for example, who have been traders all their lives.

Our twentieth and last plank deals with a new immigration policy.

The department has embarked on a new immigration plan to assist Ontario industry, universities, schools, hospitals, professional and trade associations and other organizations in obtaining from overseas professional and technical personnel not available in Canada. Surprisingly enough, there are many fields in Canada where there are very critical shortages of trained personnel, which are holding back the expansion of industry.

Such people have a large contribution to make in two ways. I would point out to the House that immigration is a matter which is contained in the federal responsibility, but ours is one of augmenting our own industry—in my department, at any event.

If they are well chosen, these technical personnel that are not available in Canada, their productivity and their contribution to the economy will be high. Secondly, they will help fight unemployment because the first essential in raising employment or in attracting new enterprise to an area is to assure employers that they can obtain their key personnel in the area, or that it is an area to which they can bring their key personnel and retain them. This involves a supply of professional and technical personnel available for recruitment, and full and adequate facilities such as educational facilities for their children, medical services and well designed and engineered communities to live in.

One only needs to look at the advertisements carried by Canadian manufacturers in European newspapers for professional and trained people to realize the importance of this.

Our programme to encourage high quality immigration, in relation to our economic programme, is already being implemented. Two immigration officers have been hired to work in the Toronto office of this department. An assistant director for immigration has been hired recently and has joined the immigration staff at Ontario House, which consists of five men. The immigration officers at Ontario House promote, counsel and guide the emigration to Ontario of persons possessing the skills and knowledge needed in this province. At the Toronto office the officers receive from prospective Ontario employers their skilled personnel requirements. In general, close liaison is maintained with trade associations, the federal government and representatives of other countries.

Mr. Chairman, these 20 points or courses of action will materially assist all areas of our province to reach new economic heights. We are confident that this programme will help us achieve an increase of six per cent in our gross provincial product and we are hopeful of receiving eight per cent. As I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, we will not hesitate to discard a course of action that holds no promise, nor will we hesitate to undertake or consider new courses of action. Not only are we going to seize our opportunities, but we are going to create opportunities. Don't sell Ontario short. We are richer in our resources, our people and our skills, than any other area in the world.

I would say to the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that they are now about to vote for Ontario's golden age.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I followed very closely what the hon. Minister said and I copied down the whole of his 20 points and I missed No. 3. I wonder if he would mind repeating it. There was $7.2 million for the Ontario Northland Railway?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is for the communication system of the Ontario Northland Railway—to extend and enlarge it.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to make a few introductory remarks before we get into the details of the estimates, I would first of all congratulate the hon. Minister for his presentation here this afternoon and for the general pattern of the programme that has been outlined.

I must say that I would hope there are very few, if any of us, in this House who would disagree with the objective; who would disagree with the purposes—the need, certainly—as I submit that this is what we should have been doing 20 years ago, when other countries were doing the same thing; and I would certainly say to the hon. Minister that, in terms of the economic council, I personally have identified myself with this for a long time, as he has.

Therefore, at the outset, Mr. Chairman, I want to make it emphatically clear that I have not come here today just to criticize for the purpose of criticizing only. There is much that has merit here. There is much that deserves support. The question is, are you going to implement it, are you going to do anything about it, or is this just a lot of window-dressing?

Let us get down, Mr. Chairman, to some of the realities of Ontario. The hon. Minister has very energetically, intelligently and almost emotionally appealed to the great riches and people of Ontario for development, and I think this is a good thing. But what is Ontario as an economic unit? It consists, as he has said, of two divisions, northern Ontario and southern Ontario.

Let me point out what I mean when I say that these economies are in conflict, one with the other. An economic council, designed to help southern Ontario may do great harm in northern Ontario, and I cannot see the correlation thus far. For example, northern Ontario is an exporter. It exports natural resources. It has by nature a low tariff industry. It wants to compete in foreign markets. It sells little or nothing in Ontario or in Canada.

The southern part of our economy is secondary industry, a manufacturing industry, and it is concerned with protection. I say at outset that there is a conflict which must be resolved. Where will the emphasis be?

Now let me go a little deeper. In conjunction with the northern economy, we on this side of the House have said for three years that something should be done about subsidizing freight rates, because one of the difficulties in northern Ontario, in mining and iron mining at the present time—certainly in the pulp and paper industry—is the cost of power and transportation. These are vital factors. Paper is sold f.o.b. New York.

Now, what are we going to do? Are we going to use the facility of Hydro to effect cheap electricity and power to these industries? By what the government has done, you would say just the contrary is true, because they now want to amalgamate all the several sectors of the Hydro development—the northwestern with the northeastern and the southern. In effect, this may be okay, it may be in order, but the real problem I ask is: Is this government prepared to retain control over industrial Hydro rates, or is it going to be handed to the commission—a commission which, by definition from the hon. Minister, is autonomous in itself and owned by the municipalities? I, for one, Mr. Chairman, am not prepared to take the position that we in this Legislature should abdicate our right to control industrial Hydro rates.

Now, these are the things the hon. Minister should be in a position to—and must—answer this afternoon. What are we going to do in that respect?

What are we going to do about freight rates which, he has admitted himself, are of great consequence? The former leader of the party opposite said that, as long as he was Prime Minister, there would be no subsidies for freight rates in Ontario. Now is this the declared continuing position of the party opposite and the government?

If it is, it is inconsistent with the position that has been outlined today.

My appeal, Mr. Chairman, is not for words, but for reality. Sure, there is need to help and to develop northern Ontario. But primarily at the present time there are two significant factors that must be treated—freight cost and power cost. And we should have a policy in this respect.

To sit down now and study a problem three years after Manitoba started to study the freight rates structure, and many years after Quebec has studied the Hydro problem with the intent of attracting industry to that province, is no time for the province of Ontario to set up a group to think about it or study it. I suggest the time has come in those two respects to be in a position to act. And I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister advise the House this afternoon what government policy is, in respect to these vital factors in conjunction with the development of northern Ontario.

With respect to a revolving fund it is a good thing. One has only to look at the statistics with respect to capitalization and ownership of our resources to know that we should encourage more Canadians to become part owners and owners of equities in this great opportunity in Ontario, our natural resource industry. But specifically what are we going to do with a revolving fund, and where are we going to get the money? Where, specifically, is the money in the estimates that will be used for this purpose? We talk about $150 million or $200 million; are we going to borrow that money? And what are the terms of repayment going to be?

Mr. Chairman, this is the third question I put specifically to the hon. Minister. Three years ago I suggested that we use the facilities of the Ontario Provincial Savings Bank. I think it could be used; I think it is an institution that could be expanded dramatically to comply with Galbraith's concept that in the public sector there is much to be done by way of investment. Expanding that institution could attract money—deposit money, savings of the people of Ontario, put on deposit, and then used by agreement, by the government for the purposes of this northern development.

It could be used for housing, as it is in England at the present time. There they are away ahead of us in conjunction with funds for public housing, for urban development and for private housing. And, while I agree wholly with the hon. Minister's objectives in respect to housing, we need the money, and the question is where are we going to get it? It is all right to identify a revolving fund, to talk in terms of a revolving fund, but the mechanics, likewise, are important.

Fourth, I would ask, specifically, where will the funds come from? Or is this, too, a matter of study?

Mr. Chairman, may I say that in respect of the southern part of the province, another problem presents itself. The hon. Minister has said on two or three occasions, and I wholly agree, that the manufacturing industry in southern Ontario is the big employer. It employs roughly, I believe, 50 per cent of the total employment and therefore it is an important determinant of whether or not we have employment or unemployment in Ontario. If things are going well with this industry, the secondary industry, the manufacturing industry, usually we have little or no unemployment.

We, on the budget—and the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), I thought, did this admirably the other day—demonstrated that a plan, whereby our gross provincial activity would grow at a constant rate of 4.5 per cent per annum, would effect full employment. Now what he meant was inducing our secondary industry to expand to the extent that it would grow at the rate of 4.5 per cent per annum.

The question that I put to the hon. Minister is simply this, how does he propose to expand secondary industry in Ontario and, specifically, to effect this type of objective? A man on the street will say almost spontaneously that we are not developing our secondary industry sufficiently fast to take up the slack in employment. The economists talk about gross national product and the rate of growth and so forth. But both are talking about the same thing.

The simple fact, Mr. Chairman, and may I point this out, is that the labour force in manufacturing, or in secondary industry, has not grown dramatically in Ontario. I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that in 1917 there were 299,000 people employed in the manufacturing industry in Ontario. And at the present time, 1961, there are 593,000.

Now relating this to overall figures, it is, say, 300,000 to 600,000, the force has doubled in that period of time. But, Mr. Chairman, the number of establishments has grown from 9,000 to only 13,000. The dollar value of factory shipment, of course, has gone up dramatically from $1.4 billion to about $12 billion, it has gone up almost 10 times. But the numbers of jobs that have been created have not, and this is the real problem we have in Ontario.

The question I put to the hon. Minister again is: In terms of specifics, what are we going to do? I do not think it is good enough at this stage to say we need foreign markets. That is obvious. It was obvious even to the group in Ottawa to the extent that they organized and sent trade missions out in the course of the last few years. But more than that is required.

In western Europe, at the present time, they have so geared their economy and their economical development that they have adopted a new concept, a concept of co-operation between management and labour, that has permitted them, Mr. Chairman, to reduce costs. And I say to the hon. Minister, something imaginative today would be of this order: that you come to this House and say, we, the province of Ontario, would like to encourage management and labour to get together and reduce costs. In order to do this it may mean that labour has to hold the line in a certain given area to find itself in a certain foreign market but, in order to do that, Mr. Chairman, surely it is not fair to say that labour must absorb the whole burden or that it must hold the line without compensation.

It would be imaginative, however, to do as certain European countries have done and to say: If you do that, and we do succeed in that foreign market and we do make money, we, the company, will permit you to share in the profits or permit you to buy into equities, or in some other fashion make up and share with you the successful operation.

We have taxing facilities here; we impose corporate taxes and the hon. Minister himself said he was giving serious consideration to reducing corporate taxes in those areas where a corporation will make a genuine effort to expand its foreign trade or its export markets. This is commendable but this, in itself, is not sufficient, Mr. Chairman. We in this province, and on this side of the Atlantic, are up against a real problem in terms of competition. To say that we are going to sell radios in Japan is just so unimaginative—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are selling them.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, now—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am simply pointing that out as an example that you can trade if you really make the effort.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, but the hon. Minister and I or anybody else in this House who is close to the industry—and there are several in my own home area who are very close to this industry—know that the wage cost in Japan is so much lower than it is here that it is almost impossible to get into that market.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Will my hon. friend permit me to say that, if he looks at the radio industry which is selling in Japan, he will find that it is not selling in the kind of line in which Japan is in competition. In short there still is room in this world for quality, and this is what these people are talking about.

Mr. Wintermeyer: With that I have no quarrel. There are areas, certainly, but in the overall the major point I am trying to make is this: that everybody, from the man who has an elementary knowledge of this problem to the most trained economist, acknowledges that competition is a factor here, and that costs are a factor. I simply say that we, if we really want to be imaginative, have to find an answer to bring our costs in line.

Now I do not think there is anybody in this House who is going to suggest that we ask labour to make an unqualified sacrifice. I think it would be ludicrous. On the other hand, I think it would be very realistic to say to management and to labour: if you two will co-operatively work under government initiative here, we are prepared to make some tax concessions to you. Now, I think this type of imaginative thinking will produce more exports for our secondary industry and, as the hon. Minister so well said—and I agree fully with him, that we are not interested in exports only for the sake of dollars but for jobs.

In Ontario we are dependent wholly on this secondary industry to create new jobs and we are not creating enough new jobs. From the year 1917 forward we have not grown dramatically in the secondary industry branch of our economy. To do so I think we have to use every opportunity, but I suggest to the hon. Minister that it will not be sufficient to go into those areas where nobody else is specializing at the present time, such as, a quality product. Do it by all means. But something more is going to be required and this concept of profit-sharing and the co-operation of management and labour, I think, can be a real one.

I certainly, for one, am not prepared to acknowledge that the last word has been said on the idea that our economy is premised on the supposition that these two forces are inimical, and each looks to his economic force for survival. I think they can be partners, and they should be, and I think it is in this area that I would encourage you to move forward because—as the hon. Minister himself said, and, again, so rightly, in this area we are working under a severe handicap. Our natural market, our Canadian market, is so small compared with our ability to produce, that we are at an immediate disadvantage. We can produce far more than we can consume in the secondary manufacturing level.

I would point out another thing which my hon. colleague, the member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), suggested the other day, and which I thought was so worthwhile. It was the matter of working out, Mr. Chairman, with a given industry—in this instance he referred to the manufacturing industry—an opportunity and encouragement to manufacture more of the complete product in Canada.

He selected the automobile industry because it so happens that all of the manufacturing industry in the automobile business is in Ontario, and necessarily would inure immediately to our benefit. I know, from personal experience, again in my own territory, that many of the parts group in the automobile industry—the suppliers so-called, the toolmen and the like—are at a great disadvantage. That part, that segment of the industry could be expanded dramatically.

I think it is fair to tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that several of these industries are trying to develop feeder areas in this very Oakville area. So there is an element of encouragement there, there is something to work with and I suggest, Mr. Chairman, if we could persuade the industry to buy all its parts in Ontario that we would do very much.

Now, another suggestion has been made, and I suggest it in a different order entirely. You know that the competition in the electrical appliance business is fierce and there is real danger frankly of some of these companies running into financial difficulty. All you have to do is read the financial pages to realize that. Now, again, we in this Legislature, as the hon. Minister has said, must be interested in jobs. If any one of those groups ever went under and we lost those jobs we would be in trouble.

I suggest to you that maybe we have become slaves to the concept of the anti-monopolistic legislation; maybe we have become so imbued with it that we fail to see what could be done with a little bit of arrangement between several companies. There is nothing wrong, for example, for one of these big companies building a certain product for the whole of Canada, and another one a washing machine or a toaster or something of that sort and getting the advantage of volume and efficiency.

Here again, I would encourage the hon. Minister to move bravely, enthusiastically and determinedly. Nobody is going to blame him for trying. Mistakes are bound to be made, but ingenuity and real ingenuity is the order of the day, Mr. Chairman. Unless we do it we are in trouble because, remember this: As the hon. Minister said so well the other day, western Europe, which was destroyed economically as the result of the last war, has gained its feet and is moving forward rapidly and effectively.

It is no longer a question in Canada, in Ontario, of sitting by and saying we will sell to these people who need our products. It is now a question of saying how can we compete with people who are producing products for the foreign market cheaper than we are producing them—and, in fact, knocking, as the hon. Minister said, on our very door to sell their products here.

Mr. Chairman, all I say is that the situation today is serious, very serious. I am not saying it is critical, I am not a person who is imbued with any gloom about this thing at all. The answer is there, the opportunity is there, but it will not be done by mere expression of word. It must be done by positiveness and positive policy. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister obviously has a good grasp of this subject and is very intelligible about the subject, but from what we have heard thus far there has been no determination, no specific determination of policy for the translation of these ideas into programming. I would define them specifically in conjunction with northern Ontario as I did at the very outset. What about freight rates? What about power rates? What specifically is the government going to do? If it is going to encourage—as I think it must, because our national economy depends as has been said, on agriculture and natural resources—and commit itself to a low tariff for a free trade area—then what is it going to do about the manufacturing industry? How is it going to be consistent in protecting it?

I do not think we can protect it with tariffs. I think we can protect it by using our imagination in such a way that we sell that product at a competitive price, at a price as cheap as or cheaper than it is being sold elsewhere. If that means we have to make certain sacrifices—and particularly if the government has to make taxation sacrifices—they should be made. In addition I would encourage the hon. Minister to consider the advisability of calling a conference of management and labour. I think he will find these groups are very, very anxious for leadership and direction. I do not think they want dictation. I recognize that. But I think, as I have talked to members highly placed in unions, and to members highly placed in industry, there is a desire today to set goals. I think we have gone beyond the time when it is a bad thing to talk about planning. I have said this many, many times.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has not.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I certainly have, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a platform of socialism.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I have never said that. Mr. Chairman, I am not changing. If one wants to go back to the very speech I made last year I think I used the same phraseology.

There must be goals and everybody—industrialists at large—have committed themselves to this. No more effective appeal has been made in the last 12 months than was made by Mr. E. P. Taylor who made a dramatic demonstration in Halifax last summer of the willingness of leaders in industry to re-think some of our traditional patterns and to co-operate with government, to co-operate with labour, to effect a formula that will permit us to compete and expand here.

Mr. Chairman, it is therefore my primary suggestion this afternoon that we recognize that the mere recitation of old platitudes, the mere recitation of words, the mere recitation of facts, are not enough. The hour is late, the time has been ebbing away ever since 1945 and I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but that we will have to act much as one acts in an emergency. I think we should adapt and gear our thinking to this concept. We should treat this as a very, very serious problem and be prepared to do things that we may not have been prepared to do 15 or 20 years ago, or that persons were not disposed to do then.

My contribution to the debate this afternoon would be a personal appeal to the hon. Minister that, in addition to all the economic theories, in addition to the concept of whether our gross national product is going up or down, and exports versus imports and development, we think of the simplicity of the situation. I think he hit the nail right on the head when he said we are really interested in our jobs and we are not creating enough new jobs in our secondary industry in Ontario, and we have not done it for a long, long while.

I think when this country, back in 1917, had 9,000 separate institutions there was probably a lot of pioneer work that was required to be done, and manufacturing grew rapidly. Now we have entered an entirely different phase. Now we are a mature group, a mature country, with a very small population, a scientific ability to produce in quantity, but likewise a high cost area. I think that a simple direct approach to this problem would recognize that if we are going to meet the competition we must meet it in dollars and we cannot expect sacrifice of any one group as opposed to another. But we can ask co-operation of all the important aspects of our economy, namely, labour, management and government, and ask that they sit down and co-ordinate their efforts.

Herein, Mr. Chairman, I say to you, the government must take the lead. I have called for an economic council heretofore. I support it now, but there is only one person, Mr. Chairman, in Ontario at the present time who can do anything about it, and he is the hon. Minister opposite who has been charged with this development.

These industrial leaders will come, these labour leaders will come, these leaders in agriculture will come to give advice and help and assistance, but fundamentally they are looking to the government for leadership and direction.

They want the goals to be determined, they want the rules of the game to be set out, and they will pursue them. But I say to the hon. Minister opposite that he must set that policy and he must make those determinations and he must fix those goals rapidly. In what has happened thus far I give him full credit for enunciating the problems, for outlining the area of solution, but thus far, Mr. Chairman, I must tell you I have not heard any concrete evidence of positive programming and policy that will really do something about the solution to these problems.

Now, he talks about immigration. Personally I would tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I feel that immigration in another context is an answer to this problem. There are those who fear immigration. I just wish that more and more people had come to this country for a long period in the past and I wish that we had a programme now that would encourage people to come here in large numbers.

This would create employment. This would develop a home market. Now we have to encourage specialists to come, if we do try to bring them, but is it not a reflection on our failure in the past? Surely it is justified for an Opposition to say, why do you have to bring specialists in science and engineering at this critical stage? Is it not demonstration that preparation was not made when it should have been made?

Mr. Chairman, maybe a little ingenuity will work. Has the hon. Minister ever thought of working a trade arrangement with some of the British West Indies, areas that are growing and are going to grow very rapidly? Why do we not make an arrangement to permit some of those people to come here? Maybe they eventually could become a province of Canada and then maybe we would expand our market very dramatically into an area of the western world that is going to grow, an area that will prove to be a bridge between North and South America some day. I would think that this type of thinking might capture the imagination and demonstrate a willingness to look at reality and, what is more, would add so greatly in the area of trying to come to grips with a problem that is going to be on our doorsteps—in fact is here now—the very moral problem of what to do about the multi-racial problems, the colour problems in the world.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I do not come, as I said at the outset, to criticize for the sake of criticism. The time is serious, the hour is late. I simply suggest that what has been outlined here this afternoon is in broad context supportable, but I find myself in the position where I must question whether or not the tough decisions have been made, the decisions that will not be popular; but the decisions that a government must bear the responsibility to make, the decisions which will determine whether we are going to stress exports or manufacturing, the decisions that will determine whether or not we are going to subsidize freight rates and power, the decisions whether or not we are going to be prepared to break with tradition and bring management and labour together and help them to share a common future that will permit, I am sure, of encouragement from all sources.

I think these are all the problems we should be talking about, Mr. Chairman, rather than the scientific problems of growth rates, the scientific problems of gross national product and the like. This problem is simple. This problem is not as complicated as one might think. But there is a lot in it that requires statesmanship. There is a lot in it that requires espousing the unpopular. There is a lot in it that requires a man to get out and move ahead of public thinking at a given time. And this, I think, is what is required more than anything else, that the leaders opposite move out ahead of public opinion and project themselves to what the situation will be, not next year, but 25 years from now.

Twenty-five years from now, what we are talking about will all have come about in varying parts of the world. I do not think we will be quarrelling as we are now quarrelling between management and labour.

Twenty-five years from now, I say that the challenge will be in the area of skills, and I commend the hon. Minister here in this respect: that he recognizes and sets some money aside for scholarships so that we can perfect our skills in this area. One researcher, Mr. Chairman, who can come up with some new idea is worth many, many persons who perform the routine. And I think that this is to be encouraged. But I regret that it was not done sooner and that we have to employ so many specialists and experts from Europe.

Well, Mr. Chairman, those are my observations by way of introduction to these estimates. I am repeating myself, but I do so because I want to be understood completely. I do not want to disagree with what has been done. I say however that there is no demonstration that the tough decisions have been made. I think they are yet to be made and they must be made.

I regret that what has been done was not done earlier. We can do nothing about it now. However, we do have the right now to say to the government: What are you going to do about what I would term these tougher decisions? And these are the decisions that will distinguish the government and distinguish this province in its economy from some of the other areas with which we are competing.

If we are to compete effectively, sir, we must demonstrate more imagination and that imagination is not sufficient in the area of quality perfection or a little change here and there, but in a fundamental reorganization of our thinking and the economical development.

Mr. Chairman, it will be my opportunity, as the opportunity of all others, to speak in more detail on the individual items and of that opportunity I will avail myself.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) would permit me to make just a few comments in relation to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), who has just spoken?

First, as the hon. leader of the Opposition has given indication, he did note that we are going to study a number of these services as to whether they require outside support.

First of all, just let me mention freight rates. I am sure hon. members realize now that about $50 million a year of the federal government's budget is put into what is called a "roll back"; it is a subsidization of the rates. I am sure you will realize that in the case of Ontario Northland Railway there is a form of a subsidization presently prevailing under two grounds; it is being subsidized really to about the extent of $2 million.

First of all, there is an investment by the province of $30 million in the Ontario Northland Railway which bears no interest, and this amounts to about $1,500,000 a year. Secondly, the communications system has a profit of about $900,000 a year, and this is turned into the general operations of the freight of the railway, to carry freight. So, actually, there is a subsidization of freight rates of the Ontario Northland Railway, in this indirect way, of about $2.5 million.

In terms of electrical rates, electricity and so on, we are looking at this very earnestly; because, as the hon. gentleman has indicated, we have come through one period, have approached quite a sharp turn on the road, and there is quite a tradition related to Hydro and its management, its relationship to this House. As hon. members know, this is a very sensitive area. We have given this problem of general services, and what purport they should have, to the economic council, to send to one of their committees.

In relation to the second question of the hon. leader of the Opposition about the Ontario Development Fund—"Where will the funds come from?"—there are many ways in which this can be done. Manitoba, I believe, has a programme of matching contributions by industry. Quebec has talked about a programme—I do not think any money has actually been lent. It sounded as if it was going to be either by way of guarantees of municipal loans—this is an interesting programme, we can discuss it at another time—or perhaps by raising money in the province by the sale of bonds especially designated for this fund. These are two areas.

This is one of the reasons why we have given this matter to the economic council, to come up with a good programme, at which time we can look at it and see. There is no money provided in the estimates for this, obviously, because it is not yet known whether there is a policy to go ahead with. But we do want to study it to see whether the traditional lending institutions are unable to handle the areas, and what areas they are, and whether they need encouragement, and so on. Where there is a will, there is a way.

As for the comments of the hon. leader of the Opposition—well, one word that is often used is "monopoly," but another word, perhaps, is a combination of companies to enable them to compete. His comments in this regard are very intelligent, in my opinion, and follow the course which we have been taking in relation to our own department in negotiations with the federal department. There has been, for many years, a general resistance toward liberalizing the general laws relating to monopolies; but there is no doubt that the experience of Great Britain is that the British electrical industry would have gone under in relation to competition with the European Common Market had it not been permitted to make sensible realignment. And here in Canada we have much unused capacity.

I should have mentioned in relation to freight rates—I do not want to get into a discussion with it—the policy of the government was indicated some time ago. The policy has not changed; we are looking at these matters generally; but I am sure that the hon. gentleman has looked at the MacPherson report of the Royal commission on transportation, and what he recommends is absolutely the contrary to the recommendation of the MacPherson report. I would also point out that in terms of the Ontario Northland Railway, which is an interline railway—it is a connecting line because it does not run south of North Bay, except by a trucking system—the problems of freight rates subsidization is an immense one, really, because we have to negotiate these rates with the railways beyond there. It is a very large problem.

The hon. leader of the Opposition also made reference to the management and labour conference. Well, I will be frank and acknowledge to him that on our economic council we have the president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, we also have Mr. Donald Gillis, who is the president of the Mine, Mill, Smelter Workers' Union at Sudbury, and Mr. Roland Hill, who is the nominee of the provincial Building and Construction Trades Council, and Canadian director of International Union of Operating Engineers, together with a number of other industrial, agricultural and government representatives. And it is the intention of the council to organize conferences somewhat along the lines mentioned by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

What I was anxious to have was to have these people work together really in a common cause, where the things they were fighting for brought them together, before we got into any areas which might bring them apart. And I am hoping that, after a few months, these people will conduct some investigations into industrial research, and the tourist industry, and government incentives and inducements to the realignment of industry, and so on; and that these people will come more and more to work with one another, and realize that we are all in this thing, every one of us—as the hon. gentleman has indicated—and we have all to succeed together, because none of us will succeed separately.

In relation to what the hon. leader of the Opposition has indicated I can say one thing, in my own defence, I think. The hon. leader of the Opposition has indicated that he hopes that this list of 20 points is not just a pious incantation, and he hopes that some of these things, if not all of them are carried out—and I think he believes me when I say that I do intend to see these are carried out.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): This is the platform for the next election, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, this is not—

Mr. Sopha: Part of it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is part of it, but it will be—I would want to say, however, in all fairness to the hon. gentleman, I mentioned an economic council; this has been established. I mentioned the second plank, the survey of the ONR, this is now under way and we will have the report in a matter of weeks. The $7.2 million extension to the ONR communication system is now under way.

The Ontario Research Foundation satellite organization is now under study and I contemplate that it will not be long before this is brought into operation. The increased grants are before the House today for the Ontario Research Foundation. The creation of the northern Ontario development committee has been established under the chairmanship of Mr. Clark. The agriculture committee has been established. The housing programme has been presented in a general way, and will be in more detail today. The committee on industrial incentives has already met and is under way.

The bill is here before this House on the amalgamation of the three systems. The tourist committee has been established and has now started to work. The committee on the Ontario development fund was announced, I understand, by the chairman of the economic council yesterday. And so on. Hon. members can go through this list and will find that a great many of these are now in operation.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, as hon. members know, I sit for the constituency of Woodbine in the east end of Toronto. Immediately to the west of that constituency is the constituency of Riverdale, as it is known provincially, or Broadview as it is known federally. It is almost exactly the same geographic area, although there are different names for the constituency federally and provincially.

The gentleman who sits for the federal riding of Broadview is the Rt. hon. George Hees, the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the federal government, and the gentleman who sits for the provincial constituency of Riverdale is the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Macaulay) in this government. It has been a matter of some interest and even amusement to me, Mr. Chairman, as a neighbour of that constituency, to watch the increasing frequency with which the provincial member jabs the elbow into the federal member.

The hon. Minister of Commerce and Development has now pretty well completed the take-over of the government of the province of Ontario, and now he is moving in to take over the federal government, starting with The Department of Trade and Commerce, but with advance forces already moving into The Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Sopha: I hear he is going to run against Walter Gordon.

Mr. MacDonald: A drippy tap; why does the hon. member not turn it off for a moment?

Mr. Sopha: I thank the hon. member for those few kind words.

Mr. MacDonald: They were realistic and appropriate, not only kind.

Mr. Bryden: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that I would agree with the hon. Minister to this extent. I do not think we should rely entirely on the federal Department of Trade and Commerce; certainly we should do what we can to help, but I think the hon. Minister in his zeal has gone far beyond that. He has got himself stumbling all over the jurisdiction of the federal Department of Trade and Commerce in a way that will undoubtedly be most confusing to that department and, I suspect, to his own department.

In fact, I was rather interested in the statement he has just made. He was much more specific about what he was going to do in the federal field than about what he was going to do in the field over which this government has jurisdiction. He had very definite and concrete plans in the federal field, but as far as the field of provincial jurisdiction is concerned, where his government has some authority, his statement, as far as I could make out simply from listening to it—he has sent me a copy of it but I have not had time to study it—as far as I could make out, it consisted of re-statements of announcements that have already been made or of statements to the effect that the government or the department planned to study various matters. In fact, such phrases as “study the advisability of” or “investigate the need for” crop up frequently in the hon. Minister’s discussion of what this government is going to do within its own field of jurisdiction.

However, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I am very glad, even though it may be a matter that more appropriately is in the federal area, that the hon. Minister is contemplating, in fact I think has decided, to send a trade group to Europe, I presume with the purpose of trying to promote the sale of Canadian products in Europe. That is a useful purpose but when it is there it will no doubt study what is going on in Europe and it will no doubt study and report back to the hon. Minister exactly the same thing as a similar group Mr. Hees sent over there some time ago reported back to him—that the countries of western Europe are making very great strides economically, primarily because they have given up various 19th century inhibitions and are engaging in economic planning.

That is what Mr. Hees' trade group reported to him among other things, and I have no doubt that since the hon. Minister will undoubtedly appoint intelligent, observant men to his trade group they will report the same to him; and even though the group may not sell very many Ontario products over there, at least they will bring back a report which will undoubtedly contribute to the education of the hon. Minister, and that is a useful role in a democratic society, too.

It is rather regrettable, Mr. Chairman, after the many advance announcements we have had as to exactly what the government was going to do and as to the very fine things the hon. Minister had in mind, that all we have really is a series of announcements of 20 unrelated items, some of which are merely items of study, some of which are merely pious hopes, and some of which have already been announced to us two or three times before, and some of which are not even in the government's jurisdiction. I had hoped, and I was really encouraged to believe from newspaper reports of speeches that the hon. Minister had made previously, that he was coming around to the idea of planning, but his statement today does not seem to indicate it. It is sort of a hit-and-miss proposition; catch-as-catch-can; based on the hope that a little stimulant here and a little makeshift there may add up to something or will be useful.

But the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, and surely it is being recognized more and more even in Canada, that without economic planning we are not going to solve the kind of problems with which Ontario is faced today, and which the hon. Minister is trying to deal with. I would say that for a person such as myself who has advocated economic planning for a long time it is gratifying to find that at least this is no longer a dirty word. True, the word is still resisted in some quarters, notably by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which is experiencing real difficulty in finding its way into the 20th century, but it is nevertheless possible to talk about it in respectable company. After reading the story that was on page seven of the Toronto Daily Star on Saturday, I am not sure that I am in respectable company at this moment, but even so, Mr. Chairman, it is now possible to talk about planning without being accused of communism by anyone other than perhaps the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. In fact, politicians of the Conservative and Liberal variety now find that they have to talk about planning, and they are doing so in increasing measure.

The problem is that to date they have done little more than talk about it. The federal leader of the Liberal Party, for example, has talked vaguely about the need for "new planning arrangements with a sense of constructive purpose and urgency," but the only concrete suggestion he has made is to establish a full-time economic council to conduct research into economic trends in all parts of Canada and to undertake systematic examination of new problems. References of that kind can be found, for example, in the Toronto Daily Star, October 16, 1961. The national economic council that the Liberal leader is talking about sounds remarkably like the productivity council of the present federal government, which has been a complete flop as far as any contribution to planning or to economic development is concerned.

It is an axiom of Canadian politics that the Conservative and Liberal parties have regularly stolen ideas from the New Democratic Party and, before it, from the CCF. But in this case, they have unfortunately not stolen the idea, they have merely stolen the word.

Mr. Whicher: We stole Mr. Argue too.

An hon. member: You can have him.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryden: This becomes very clear from the budget statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and the economic statement of the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Macaulay) and his further statement of today.

The budget, for example, is declared to be "the first step in a new five-year plan." But when one tries to discover something about the plan, one is confronted by vague statements such as the following on page five of the budget statement:

Under this plan our aim will be to maintain an adequate rate of economic growth consistent with the financial capacity of the province.

—it would be very hard, Mr. Chairman, to find anybody who would disagree with that platitude.

A study of the hon. Minister's economic statement discloses nothing but more of the same kind of vague statement. On pages 29 and 30, for example, one finds the following—and I am quoting two or three sentences that appear on those pages:

Our economic policies can be summed up in one word: "growth." The government pledges its co-operation and support to industry. In co-operation with industry, labour, agriculture, commerce and science, we will do our utmost to ensure the greatest possible economic growth in Ontario.

These are noble statements, Mr. Chairman, but it is time we faced the fact that we will not produce economic growth merely by talking about it or wishing for it. To say that we are aiming at growth begs the question. What is required is a clear indication of the degree and kind of growth which the government is aiming at both in the short term and in the longer run, and the methods by which it expects to achieve it.

The hon. Minister of Commerce and Development is apparently pinning most of his hopes on the new Ontario Economic Council. I would like to read what he originally said about that in his economic statement. What he said today is really just elaboration on what he said in the earlier statement, so I will content myself with the earlier statement which appears on page 30 of the economic statement, as follows:

We are looking to the new Ontario Economic Council to come up with the answers to many of our economic problems. Committees are now being established to study and report on specific subjects, such as the tourist industry, industrial research, industrial development, agriculture and development in northern Ontario. As I stated before, the activities of the council will not be limited to the investigation of problems over which the Ontario government has jurisdiction; we are going to look into anything and everything which affects the Ontario economy and use every method open to us to safeguard our interests and promote economic growth and development in this province.

An economic council of the kind which has just been set up could play a dynamic role in the development of the province, but in the context in which the hon. Minister has placed it, it will be little more effective than a trapped bird, flapping its wings in futility against the ceiling. As the hon. Minister himself has stated, the economic council cannot and should not take over the functions of government, but as long as the government abdicates its own responsibilities, and there is certainly nothing to date to indicate that it is not abdicating its responsibilities, then there is very little for the council to do.

The hon. Minister seems to visualize it as a sort of research agency; it is going to conduct various studies, he says. I must say I lost track of all the studies these committees are going to conduct. I have come to the conclusion that perhaps the hon. Minister thinks if he gets enough studies conducted and printed he will solve the unemployment by putting people to work on research and printing. I do not know, but he certainly is going to have a lot of studies.

I would suggest to him that the research function can be better carried on by full-time personnel in his own department, and if he needs more such personnel, as he may very well do, I for one would be happy to vote him the money required. The council consists of very busy men who really have no time for research. What will happen, of course, is that such studies as are undertaken will be produced by the departmental staff. The hon. Minister surely does not think he can fool us into thinking that these men who are on the council or its committees are going to produce the actual studies. The council will no doubt review them before they are finalized, and this will be useful, but it seems a rather small function for such a large council.

I am a great believer in research. I believe that continuing economic studies should always be under way as to both our current economic situation and our future prospects.

At the same time, I am mindful of the fact that one of the oldest excuses known to man for inaction is the claim that a subject is under study. If we wait until all possible facts have been amassed and digested, we will never act, because we will never get them all amassed, not even with the new calculating machines they are developing.

There is enough information available right now for the government to draw up clear-cut, comprehensive plans and to announce those plans. True, its plans will undoubtedly have to be revised in the light of future experience but that will always be the case. It is no excuse for failure to plan now.

In the second half of the 20th century, it is no longer possible to accept the 19th century economic mysticism that if private individuals and companies are left to pursue their own economic self-interest, making such private decisions as appear to them most likely to contribute to that self-interest, the sum total of these unrelated decisions will miraculously become the maximum economic well-being of the community as a whole.

Economists of 100 years ago even used to talk of an invisible hand which led to this desirable result. It is time we got over the childish notion that an invisible hand will solve our problems for us. It makes no more sense for governments to fail to plan the development of the economy as a whole than it would for the management of a private business to fail to plan the development of that business, and any management that failed in that respect would not be in business for more than a week.

I recognize that, fundamentally, planning is the responsibility of the federal government. It is imperative, however, that there should be close co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. Otherwise, they could easily negative each other's efforts.

For that reason the New Democratic Party proposes in the programme it adopted last August that a federal-provincial planning and development council should be set up to provide a regular channel of co-operation and co-ordination between the two levels of government. I would suggest that the hon. Minister, through his intergovernment relations branch, should pursue this idea and urge it upon the federal government and the other provinces.

Moreover, in a province of the size of Ontario, a great deal can be done at the provincial level even in the absence of constructive leadership from the federal government.

We should always be prepared to work closely with that government without challenging their jurisdiction altogether, and we should urge upon it a more mature and meaningful approach to planning than it has now. But we should also be prepared to proceed on our own. The government should determine the rate of economic growth it thinks Ontario can achieve.

I am getting tired of hearing statements to the effect that we want growth with no indication of what the government thinks is feasible as far as growth is concerned. And I think that such estimates should be in terms of not only the coming year but the next few years; we should have both a short-term and a long-term forecast and the forecast should be formed on the basis of our knowledge of the manpower and resources available.

I would like to emphasize further, Mr.

Chairman, that I do not mean that the government should merely estimate the growth which it thinks will take place if nature is left to take its course. What it should do is estimate the growth of which we will be capable if all our manpower and resources are fully employed, after making reasonable allowance, of course, for fractional unemployment. It should then devise policies of public investment, encouragement to private industry, and so on, which it hopes will achieve that rate of growth. And I want to emphasize again that its policies should all be in terms of an objective, the objective should be stated, and then the policies should be formulated in relation to that objective. They should be part of an integrated whole, and as far as possible they should be announced as such.

It is not good enough for the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development to say, as he said on page 29 of his economic statement:

We are designing specific policies to encourage economic growth in Ontario. The government has already announced a new 12-point housing programme and the establishment of the Ontario Economic Council. Additional programmes will be announced to the hon. members shortly.

And a few more were announced today.

But I would like to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that this is the old-fashioned, unplanned bits-and-pieces approach. A makeshift here, and a stimulant there, do little more than create confusion. It is imperative for private industry to have a clear idea of what the government has in mind, not only what it has in mind at this moment but what its total programme is. Otherwise, it will be impossible for industry to adapt itself to the government's plans and, as I will try to indicate in a moment, close co-operation between the government and the private sector is the essence of good planning.

At this point, I would like to make one further suggestion with regard to the planning of the government. I think the time has come when it is insufficient for a treasurer of a province, particularly in a large province like this, to do as the hon. Provincial Treasurer did once this year, and that is present estimates of revenues and expenditures for one year only. Most businesses develop their plans on the basis of about three years, and I think that the government should be prepared to start estimating its requirements on a three-year basis. Certainly they would have a more specific budget for the one-year period on which the voting of funds would be based, but they should also have three-year forecasts of their requirements so that industry will have some idea of where it stands as far as future government activity is concerned. This is all a phase of planning. The government has mentioned a five-year plan in the budget, but for the life of me I cannot see any evidence of it yet or any evidence of anything that even looks like it.

Getting back, however, to my suggestions as to just how planning could be undertaken, I would like to state that in my opinion it is not sufficient to think in terms merely of aggregate growth; there are two important modifications or refinements that should be made.

Firstly, it is important that we consider the quality as well as the degree of growth we have in mind. We cannot go on much longer starving ourselves of essential social capital. There has to be some balancing of the various demands for investment funds—as between social and private purposes and also among various private purposes.

Secondly, we have to consider the degrees of growth that are possible in various sectors of the economy. Let us assume that we set ourselves what I consider to be the quite reasonable objective of a 25 per cent increase in our gross product in the next four years. Clearly, the rate of growth needed to produce this increase could not be achieved uniformly across the economy. Some industries have much greater opportunity for expansion than others, and we naturally expect them to have a faster-than-average rate of growth to compensate for a slower-than-average rate elsewhere. These variations necessarily have to be taken into account in any plan that may be developed.

So much then for the kind of objectives the government should set for the economy. It would take too long for me to attempt to outline in detail the kind of measures I think it should develop in order to achieve those objectives. I would, however, like to call attention to the fact that the main determinants of growth are foreign trade and investment.

Foreign trade is something over which we have only limited control, even at the federal level. Certainly everything possible should be done to stimulate trade and, as I said before, I agree with the hon. Minister that we in Ontario should not rely entirely on the federal government, although I must say he somewhat took my breath away by the extent to which he plans to substitute for the federal government. He apparently has very little confidence in the department operated by his hon. colleague out there in the east end. We should do what we can to supplement that government's efforts to stimulate trade and, above all, Mr. Chairman, we should always consider ways and means of assisting our own industries in becoming more competitive.

But when all that is said and done, the amount of trade we can expect is, to an important degree, determined independently of us. In making economic plans, therefore, our only possible course is to make realistic estimates of the level of trade we can expect and then adjust our procedure accordingly.

This makes investment the most important single factor in economic planning, because investment is a function over which we can exercise considerable influence. Our great problem at the present time, and I have gone into this at some length before so I will not dwell on it now, but it is a point, apparently, which the hon. Minister is unprepared to recognize—our great problem at the present time is the inadequacy of private investment, and the recently published figures of investment plans for the coming year do not indicate that this inadequacy will be anything like fully remedied.

The lesson is plain. The government must compensate for the lack of private investment with public investment. I would like to emphasize, however, as I have emphasized before, that the investment programme should be planned and co-ordinated. Preferably, it should be devised and carried out co-operatively by the federal and provincial government, but even if we assume that the present refusal to face either facts or responsibilities will continue to dominate government thinking at Ottawa, I think Ontario should be prepared to work out and announce a co-ordinated programme of its own. It is my submission to you, Mr. Chairman, that notwithstanding the spate of announcements we have had and perhaps indicated by that spate of announcements, the government has no co-ordinated investment programme; it is merely drumming up policies to meet temporary emergencies as they come along.

Now in the context of economic planning which I have just outlined, I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that the new economic council, which the hon. Minister has appointed, would acquire functions that are worth performing, as distinct from the functions it now has which may be useful but in view of its size are a little bit in the nature of using a pile-driver to crack nuts. It is a council of very distinguished people with a great many subcommittees, most of which are going to be responsible for preparing reports which will probably be prepared by the staff in his department anyway.

I would suggest, in the context of economic planning, that a council like that, and the various sub-agencies which the hon. Minister has suggested, have a genuine function to perform—and a useful one. No one suggests that any government is all-wise and least of all this one. The members of the economic council and its subcommittees have a vast fund of experience and knowledge that could be of incalculable value to the government in arriving at its overall objectives and in devising plans to meet those objectives. The government has to take ultimate responsibility, but to enlist the co-operation of business, labour, agriculture and other sections of the community in drawing up plans, is the best way of ensuring the co-operation of these groups in carrying them out.

These groups can be particularly helpful in the detailed working out of the plans. As I have already indicated, it is not sufficient merely to set ourselves an overall objective. That objective has to be broken down into specific objectives for specific sectors of the economy.

Under the economic council, there should be specific industrial panels or working groups through which management, labour and others in specific industries can work together, not merely in preparing reports but in setting objectives and in figuring out ways of achieving objectives for their industries. This is the sort of thing that is going on in Europe; they are not content merely to write reports, they sit down and say, "There is an overall objective for the economy as a whole; what can our particular sector contribute to that? To what extent can we contribute to overall growth? Just what is a reasonable objective for our sector and how can we achieve that objective?" That is a meaningful activity and a highly useful one. And it would permit the groups on these various panels or subcommittees, or whatever you want to call them, to work together not only for their own benefit but also for the benefit of the community as a whole.

We hear a great deal these days about the need for labour-management co-operation, and we have heard a fair amount about it from the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), including some comments today. I would like to suggest to you, sir, that most of the comments that have been made on this subject are nothing but pious platitudes, because we will never achieve such co-operation in any meaningful sense under our present "every man for himself" philosophy.

If management has no larger role to play in economy than merely to make profits—and I am not saying there is anything wrong with that—but if that is to be their sole objective, then they will naturally concentrate on making profits regardless of the secondary effects of any of their actions elsewhere in the economy. That is just human nature. Similarly, if labour has no other function than to get what it can in the way of wages and other benefits, then it will concentrate on that.

But if both of them are brought together with government and other sections of the community to help in developing and implementing plans for the benefit of the whole community, they will have a more meaningful role to play than they have now. I would like to stress, Mr. Chairman, that I am not talking about bringing them together to hear nice little Sunday school lectures about the value of co-operation or about how we should all pull together, being all citizens of this great country and all having interests in common.

We all know that; everybody knows that. But the point is they are not given any opportunity to participate directly in the planning of the development of the country, mainly because there are no plans for that development. If we can bring them together, make them in ways such as I have suggested and as are now being applied in other countries a natural part of a meaningful process which is the planning of the development of the whole economy, then we can expect that while they will, while continuing to look after their own private interests, relate those interests to the overall benefit of the community. What is even more important, they will be assured—and I think this is very important—that any immediate sacrifice they may make will be for the benefit of the community as a whole, including themselves, in the long run, and not merely for the profit of some other individual interest.

I would say that it would be perfectly ridiculous, for example, to ask the employees of a large profitable enterprise to forego a wage increase, when the only effect of it is that somebody else is going to get a bigger chunk of the pie. But if their activities are related to overall development, then I think that our working people and our management groups will be just as responsible as those in Europe; and it has been demonstrated that those in Europe, given the opportunity to participate and given the leadership by the government, they do take a thoroughly responsible attitude to the community and to their responsibilities to it. It is only through economic planning, and not through pious platitudes, that true labour-management co-operation will come about.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to stress the point that planning, as I envisage it and as I have tried to set it forth this afternoon, does not involve detailed interference in the day-to-day operation of businesses in this country. That is an old bogey that could well be laid to rest, and I hope will be laid to rest in the near future. The government has to give leadership; it has to set objectives. It has to consult with industry and labour and others, but it has to take responsibility for setting objectives and for indicating the ways in which those objectives are to be realized. Within that overall framework, there will still be all the scope in the world for private initiative and private decision. In fact, the scope will probably be greater because there will be more continuous expansion.

Mr. Chairman, it is undoubtedly not apparent to the House as a whole that I am being knocked a little bit off stride by two absolutely conflicting sets of heckling from the Liberal benches. From one direction I am being told that I am absolutely right and that the Liberal Party agrees with me entirely, and from another direction I am being told that I am absolutely wrong and that I am planning to lead the country down the garden path to socialism.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to assume any responsibility for the ambivalence of the Liberal Party, and I suppose you are powerless to protect me against this ambivalent heckling, but I thought the House might be interested.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, to complete the point I was trying to make, the essence of sound planning is that the government sets objectives but its intervention actually is limited really to a very narrow area, to the critical point, shall we say. I would say right now that the government should intervene, and in a much more wholehearted way than it is doing, with a full-fledged investment programme to compensate for the lack of private investment. And if, as would undoubtedly happen if they did that, private investment reached the point where there was a danger of serious inflation as we had a few years ago, then obviously the government should slow down public investment and probably should take steps to put the brakes on private investment. But that degree of regulation is really only at the margin. Economic controls can be exercised by operating on the margin in key areas of the economy, leaving the day-today decisions still to be made by private individuals as they have always been made.

One last suggestion I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that although I have considered for a long time that economic planning is not only necessary but also feasible, I think the feasibility of it becomes greater every day. Industry has now developed calculating machines which, I think, when put to work on some of our baffling economic problems, will assist us very greatly in refining the indicators that we now use in attempting to forecast economic growth and other economic development; and also in applying those indicators in a much more accurate manner than we now do.

Economic forecasting is a matter of judgment; we just cannot get staff big enough to work out all the variables that should be taken into account, but business machines are reaching the point where a lot of those difficulties are being met. I am certainly no expert on business machines but I would think that the kind of machine that can, out of very scattered preliminary returns on a national election in the United States, predict with quite a remarkable degree of accuracy the ultimate outcome of the election, could be put to use for, I think, something that might be a little more useful to us—and that is trying to forecast exactly where our economy is heading.

As we refine our techniques for analyzing the economy and forecasting probable future growth, we will of course be able to make plans that will be more and more precise in counteracting anticipated developments that are considered undesirable. At any rate, Mr. Chairman, the need for planning has surely now been established beyond all conceivable doubt. It is unfortunate that the department, which I presume in this government is mainly interested in planning, apparently has not developed any overall plans. It has no views, that I have been able to determine, as to what rate of economic growth we should have in this province, what rate we need to produce full employment, what rate we should be striving for not only this year but over the next three or four years—all we have is the same old series of disjointed announcements by the hon. Minister, many of which are very useful in themselves but which when taken together do not add up to anything in particular. They certainly do not add up to any plan to solve the very serious problem of economic stagnation with which we have been faced for the last four years at least, and with which, according to any present indications, we will likely be faced at least until 1965, and probably further, at least until the point when the crop of war babies start to move into the family formation field themselves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that is really too long to wait for a dynamic stimulant to our economy, and it is regrettable that neither this government, nor the government at Ottawa, is prepared to take the advice of qualified people in the business field, as in many others, to try to use public investment as a substitute for inadequate private investment and as a stimulant which the economy so sadly lacks at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Before we go to vote 301, which I assume now that we have had the general declaration of comment from each of the three parties, we will proceed to, may I make several suggestions as to how we might best proceed if I could, sir? There is nothing in my estimates relating to the Ontario Northland Railway, and it may be that a number of members in the House would like to speak on the Ontario Northland Railway. Could I suggest to you therefore that the Ontario Northland Railway discussion follow vote 311, which completes the discussion of the three—the foundation and the development commission and the Ontario Northland Railway? Would you put them together there—the Ontario Northland Railway at the end of vote 311?

Might I make one other suggestion and that is—since 306 is an administrative vote and 312 is a capital vote—that we might discuss 306 and 312 together and pass them together as vote 306.

One other comment I would like to make, if I might, Mr. Chairman. I am greatly obligated to the staffs of the departments, although no reference has been made by the hon. members opposite. I frankly want to say that, while I deserve no credit myself, in the short time that we have had to put these two departments together, to alter the programme which we have now presented to the House has really been a mammoth job for the staff.

They worked nights, days, Saturdays and Sundays and I am very deeply obligated to them. I will mention some of them by name when we go through the various votes but just in the beginning I would very much like to have the opportunity of expressing here, sir, my gratitude as a Minister—and, I think, this House's gratitude—to three persons who have been of tremendous assistance in the reorganization of these departments, which has been a larger job than it may appear.

First, of course, is Mr. Gathercole, the Deputy Minister of the department, who has been a tower of strength to me, and attains the highest standards, I think, of our public service. Secondly, Mr. Clarkson, who has been the Deputy Minister of Energy Resources, and who is the assistant Deputy Minister of Commerce and Development, a very fine Canadian gentleman; he is a young man and he has done yeoman service with reference to these departments. I am very grateful to him. The last is Mr. Etchen, who is before me with Mr. Gathercole at the table; Mr. Etchen is the director of the finance and administration branch, and I will now refer to him and others as we go through the votes.

Mr. Chairman, if it is now agreeable to the House, perhaps we can get on to the separate items.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, before we get into the items there are a few general remarks I would like to make about this department.

The first thing I would like to do, Mr. Chairman, is to congratulate the hon. Minister on the speech he gave us this afternoon outlining the programme he has for the department. It was certainly given with great sincerity and I have no doubt in the world that he fully intends to do those things that he has said that he will do, here this afternoon. However, there are some things—and a few of the points we have not had an opportunity to study—but there are some points, perhaps, we might disagree on, or about which we might have some comment.

In congratulating the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, I wish that the people of the province of Ontario had the opportunity to hear him this afternoon because to me it was the greatest indictment of the Conservative Party and their governing ability during the past 10 years that I have ever heard any living man give.

How anybody, Mr. Chairman, can stand up as he did this afternoon and tell us in the 20 points, telling us the things he is going to do and, in the same breath tell us, for example, I will give you item No. 12. I have not got it in his words because I have not had the opportunity of studying his speech, although he kindly sent it over to me, but in the notes that I made myself, he was going to study the tourist industry and he was going to attempt to turn the deficit that we now have in the travel industry into a surplus. Mr. Chairman, what I ask is this: if the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Macaulay) is going to take on this job, what has the Minister of Travel and Publicity been doing for the last 15 years in this province? That is what I would like to know.

Time after time we have heard the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) stand in the House and he has told us what he has done in the past year, his plans for the future. He has told us that we are a great tourist province, that everything is under control, and yet this afternoon in point No. 12 that the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development has given to us he has said, by telling us what he is going to do, that the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity has been negligent in his duty. I defy anybody to say otherwise.

But I am not so worried about point No. 12, because there are three or four more that I wish to bring to the attention of the House.

First may I say, and I think I made myself clear in my opening remarks, that if the hon. Minister by taking over The Department of Travel and Publicity can change our deficit into a surplus, that we on this side of the House are all for it. We are all for many of the other things that he has suggested. We know perfectly well that we must manufacture more goods in this province ourselves in order to employ more labour and that we must manufacture them so that we can sell them in the province of Ontario and also sell them in the foreign markets of the world. If that is the basis upon which the hon. Minister has spoken, and I believe it is, then we are certainly all for it.

But let us look at another point, point No. 7. In the Ontario Economic Council, point No. 7, he is going to have an agricultural committee, and in describing this agricultural committee he told us that his department was now studying a sale involving some millions of dollars in new markets, involving I presume farmers' produce of the province of Ontario. Mr. Chairman, I ask this: where has the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) been for the last few years? Why has he not looked after this? Is it necessary that we have to have a czar, a man who runs not only the Cabinet, he is taking over The Department of Agriculture, as well as The Department of Travel and Publicity.

Let us go on a little bit further, because in point No. 20 he says this—these are just the notes that I have—"We are now going to have a new immigration policy. We are going to get professional and technical trades personnel from foreign countries and have them come into the province of Ontario as immigrants." May I respectfully say to the hon. Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko): what has he been doing for the last number of years? Is it necessary that the Conservative government has to give all the powers that are incorporated in their government into the hands of this one man? Is it necessary that the hon. Minister of Economics has got to bring in technical and professional men? If such is the case, my suggestion to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is fire the hon. Minister of Citizenship; there is no use in having both of them.

But let us go on a little bit further—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This is nice constructive criticism!

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Prime Minister is in danger of being fired himself because of point No. 9. As I have made my notes, we find here that the hon. Minister of Economics is going to retrain the labour force in the province of Ontario. Labour certainly should be retrained, in my opinion, and I agree with him 100 per cent. But in the same breath he admitted, if I copied properly, he admitted that this was really the business of The Department of Education and The Department of Labour; so, I tell the hon. Prime Minister, he may be going out the door too.

There was one point, however, where I think that he could have gone a little bit further. I refer to point No. 13, and here he said—. Before I get to point No. 13, I am going to go back for a minute, Mr. Chairman, to No. 1 where the hon. Minister is going to create an Ontario economic council. I say to hon. members that if this is going to help us employ our labour in the province of Ontario; if it is going to help industry that is not getting along too well, put it on its feet; if it is going to help us manufacture goods to sell in the province of Ontario and to sell in foreign markets; then I am all for it and I hope that the Ontario Economic Council will be a success. But I ask you, Mr. Chairman, in reality the economic council of the province of Ontario is the Cabinet that is sitting over there. They have been sitting there for many years and here they are asking a body of responsible businessmen and responsible citizens of this province to do a job and put the economy of the province of Ontario on a plane where they should have put it in the past number of years.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. member in favour of it?

Mr. Whicher: I am absolutely in favour of it, because they have not been able to do the job.

Mr. MacDonald: They obviously cannot do it because they have not the power to act.

Mr. Whicher: They have the power.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member should make up his mind which way he is going.

Mr. Whicher: I know which way I am going.

Mr. Chairman, my point is simply this: if the Ontario Economic Council can help industry and labour and citizens of the province of Ontario, then we are all for it. But by setting up this economic council he has torn the former hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Allan) all to shreds, because by proposing the 20 points that we have here this afternoon he is condemning the former hon. Minister for not doing one single solitary thing.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get to a point where I feel that the hon. Minister really did not go far enough. I might say it is the only one, but point No. 13, as I read it, is the study of creating an Ontario development fund in the Ontario Economic Council. He told us that he has set up a committee to study this.

Mr. Chairman, I have every sympathy with what the hon. Minister told us a moment or two ago when he said it had been a tremendous job to get this department functioning as he wishes it to function. He paid tribute to several of the men who helped him, and certainly I agree with what he said. I know that it was a big job, but let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the proposition of setting up an Ontario development fund did not just come five minutes ago, it did not just come when the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) became also the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development. It came into being during the past many months, I would say, and particularly when the hon. Minister was on the leadership campaign in the province of Ontario.

I think I would not be doing my duty if I did not point out to the people of this province that now is the time we want this development fund. Now, not a year or two years from now. We want to get the show on the road, the economic way of life on a higher plane than we have at the present time.

Let me just quote to hon. members something that the hon. Minister has said. For example, in the Peterborough Examiner on October 18 of 1961 he is quoted as follows:

The first step is to form an Ontario development fund which would be self-liquidating. This should be used to help four special areas of endeavour. First, non-industrial or depressed areas; second, areas wishing to expand existing industries; third, tourist industries; and fourth, agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I want to go on record: with the hon. Minister I am in complete accord, but my question is this: where is the fund? Where, in these estimates that we are going to pass this afternoon or some afternoon, where is there any indication that this fund is going to be set up?

As I recall what the hon. Minister said, he suggested that in this economic council there was a subcommittee being set up to study the possibility of an Ontario development fund. But that is not what he said in Peterborough on October 18 last. Furthermore, he went on to say this:

Small loans must be made available to small businesses. We in Canada are now in a desperate fight for economic survival.

Mr. Chairman, this is exactly the same man speaking in Peterborough that was speaking to us here this afternoon. I agree with the hon. Minister that small loans are necessary for small businessmen in this province. I agree that it would do a great deal to help get the economy on the road again. But my question to the hon. Minister is this: where in these estimates that we are about to pass is there any indication that we are going to have any small loans for small businesses?

I take hon. members now to another fine newspaper in the province of Ontario. It is the Toronto Daily Star and it is headed "Tories Need a New Image." It comes from Picton and I quote as follows:

Mr. Macaulay elaborated on one proposal he intends to present at the convention and developing if he is chosen leader, to create a multi-million dollar Ontario development fund, accumulated by floating bonds among Ontario people. This fund, he said, would help create new industry by offering loans. Ontario people, he said, would be putting money in their own development.

My question once more, Mr. Chairman: where is the Ontario development fund? We are getting tired of study in this Legislature, and as two of the hon. members have said before here this afternoon, what we want is a little bit of action. In order to create action and get industry on the road again in this province, we need a development fund, as the hon. Minister has said on numerous occasions.

I quote one more speech that the hon. Minister made, quoted in the Globe and Mail of October 25, 1961, in which he says:

He said he would like also to establish a large development fund which would lend money to create new industry, expand industry and encourage small business and tourist trade.

Mr. Macaulay said that he believes in the development of what he called an all-Ontario policy, a policy under which every part of the province would be promoted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with that I most heartily agree again, but my question to him is where, in the speech that he so capably delivered this afternoon, is there any indication whatsoever that he is going to look after, for example, Bruce county? He said that he was going to look after all parts of the province. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that as far as the province of Ontario is concerned, most of the development in this province in the last number of years and under the Tory regime has taken place in the city areas and the rural areas have been neglected.

It is all very well for the hon. Minister to stand here this afternoon and tell us, or tell us as he did in October when he was running under a different star, that he intends to develop all of the province of Ontario. My question to him here, Mr. Chairman, is how is he going to develop the rural areas of the province of Ontario—because we would be very interested—and when it is going to happen?

Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take too long as far as my opening remarks are concerned. Once again I tell hon. members that there are many of the points with which I can agree. On the other hand, there is much repetition, a great deal of repetition, in what the hon. Minister has said. For example, in Nos. 16, 17, 18, and 19 points of his 20-point programme, they are as follows, and once more I impress upon hon. members that I have only rough notes.

No. 16, he is going to establish trade missions, he is going to sell in foreign countries and Europe first. No. 17 is foreign offices and added staff. Well now, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that these are one and the same point. There is no use having 20 points just for the sake of numbering when in reality there were about four or five good ones here and they should have all been put together.

For example, No. 18, the creation of a trade office in Europe, and No. 19, manufacturers' co-operative agencies. I would like to ask this question, Mr. Chairman: what is the difference between trade missions and trade offices, because obviously if a mission is going to go anywhere they have to have an office somewhere in some foreign country in order to do their selling. What is the difference?

Mr. J. H. White (London South): They are entirely different.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member is going to get into trouble because the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) cannot hurt my feelings; but he should not hurt the feelings of the "deputy minister of agriculture," the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay), because he is going to be selling the hon. Minister of Agriculture's goods from now on, or at least part of them. I hope he sells them too!

I might say, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down, that I do wish him every bit of success. There is only one way that we are going to get the economy of the province of Ontario on the road again, to make the show a success, and that is change the manner in which the hon. members opposite have been doing business in the past few years. In the hon. Minister's speech this afternoon he has definitely told us that the policies of the Conservative government in the province of Ontario in the past have not been successful.

Of that, Mr. Chairman, we are sure. What we are not sure of is that the policies that he has presented for the future will be successful; but we certainly hope that he will devote his time and energy and that five years from now, or within a reasonable length of time, everyone in this province, in this wealthy province, will be working again and have respectable wages. And we will be selling our goods, not only to our own people in Ontario, but to foreign lands all over the world.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Do you want to call it 5 o'clock, Mr. Chairman? I imagine I would need about six minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: It should be remembered that there are a few others who would like about six minutes also. Three or four others have spoken in general terms and the guillotine should not drop—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make reference to the way the estimates are being conducted and it was only a question of time until we got to this point.

We started out originally permitting the hon. Minister to make a general statement about the affairs of his department, he was then followed by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. leader of the ND Party (Mr. MacDonald). It has been obvious, from where I sit, that gradually this has broken down until now every hon. member in the House feels he has a right to make as long a general statement as he pleases on any estimate, and this just brings the matter to a head.

I have watched this develop through the estimates that have been considered and I would suggest to the Chairman that we revert to what is the proper procedure, namely, the hon. Minister makes a general statement, the hon. leader of the Opposition makes a general statement, the hon. leader of the ND Party makes a general statement, and then other hon. members of the House on any side who wish to speak may speak on the individual votes. Thus we will have a much more orderly approach.

This, of course, is the traditional approach to the estimates, that has been followed in this House, at least as long as I have been here.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I can say that I agree with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), but my only protest at the moment is that he is dropping the guillotine in the middle of the estimates, when there have been three or four from one group and there are a few of us who may have some general remarks. If the hon. Prime Minister wants to institute this with the next body of estimates, I will support him.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am a very co-operative man, Mr. Chairman, and we will get through the estimates of this department in the present improper way as we are doing it, and then I would suggest to the Chairman that from here on we follow the procedure. Then everyone will know exactly—and I do not want my hon. friends from the other side to feel that I am attempting to stifle them, because I am not, I am only attempting to bring a little order into what is rapidly approaching chaos.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, before this is finalized, I want to make one point emphatically clear, that I have no great disagreement in principle here. But I want to make it likewise clear that there are 23 members here who want to perform the function of the Opposition and I think that if we are going to have this rule, then on the individual estimates you must allow great latitude, Mr. Chairman.

I am not suggesting that under a specific item that is detailed for one specific consideration that we talk about something else that should be discussed under another item, but I would hope that no one is denied the opportunity of making an expression as broad as he may wish to make it at some time during the consideration of the detailed items.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get this matter straight. Last night I adjourned the House for lack of speakers on the budget debate. This is the traditional form in which an hon. member may speak covering any department.

What has happened recently is that not only do we get into the position where we are getting general speeches before the estimates are even dealt with, but then we are getting general speeches on every item of the estimates.

Now it seems to me if we lay down a procedure and follow it, no one will be stifled, everyone can speak as they like. But let us speak in the proper place and in the proper order in which the business of the House should be called.

Everybody will have an opportunity to speak, but I think we must follow the rules of procedure as they are laid down and this is what I am suggesting the Chairman do in the future.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, I am speaking to a point of order. I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), and the hon. leader of the minority group (Mr. MacDonald), that there are a few other persons in this House other than leaders of the parties. There are a few other people in this House who do not belong in the executive council of the government, there may be a few other people who would like to make general statements.

I cannot see anything wrong with having a Cabinet Minister making a short general statement on the purposes and the policies of his department as he sees them, but for the life of me I cannot see why a similar privilege should be extended to the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. leader of the minority group if that privilege is not also granted to every other hon. member of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is just breaking down the rule the hon. Prime Minister has proposed.

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, I am. I would say with the utmost of sincerity, that in my opinion I would feel that the Cabinet Minister should make a short general statement and that should be it. From then on we go into the estimates of that department, and if any hon. member of this House wishes to speak in detail, that is the time. If he has got a general statement to make, that is the purpose of the budget debate. Surely some of the hours that we are putting in in this House are too long, because too many hon. members are speaking too often on each one of these.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed: Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will go on with these estimates and budget debate on Thursday, when there will be a night session.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until Thursday next at 3 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5:05 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1962

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the west gallery students from St. Francis of Assisi Separate School, Toronto; and in the Speaker's gallery, a group from the legislative institute of the United Rubber Workers of America.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's seventh report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr37, An Act respecting Riverview Health Association.

Bill No. Pr38, An Act respecting The Windsor Board of Education and The Windsor Suburban District High School Board.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr7, An Act respecting the City of London.

Bill No. Pr28, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Bill No. Pr35, An Act respecting Laurentian University of Sudbury.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill, having been withdrawn, be not reported; and would further recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted:

Bill No. Pr20, An Act respecting the United Townships of Medora and Wood.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES LIMITED

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the tax payable by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited under The Provincial Land Tax Act for the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE VARIATION OF TRUSTS ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Variation of Trusts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that my hon. friends opposite would like an explanation of these new bills as I go along. This bill merely provides for the filing of an order made under The Variation of Trusts Act by the registrar of the Supreme Court with the clerk of the surrogate court in the event that the trust affects any will or other document that would normally pertain to the surrogate court jurisdiction.

THE MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mortgages Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Again anticipating the same requirement, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require notice of an intention to exercise a contractual power of sale under a mortgage to be given to those concerned. However, provision is made under which this general rule may be relaxed or set aside by the court in appropriate cases. In substance, it means that a mortgage contractual relationship of that sort, with a provision that a sale may take place without notice, could not operate in that way except within the provisions of the required notice, contained in this amending Act.

THE LOAN AND TRUST CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Again, Mr. Speaker, anticipating the same request, the amendment will reduce the minimum amount required to be paid in on directors' qualifying shares from $1,000 to $500. It will make possible a wider distribution of the capital stock of trust and loan companies by reducing the par value, statutory par value, from $10 down to as low as $1.

Under present section 78 a trust company that maintains a common trust fund is required to file and pass before a judge of a surrogate court an account of its dealings with the fund at least once in every three-year period. These amendments will dispense with judicial accountings unless required by the registrar of loan and trust corporations, or requested by the trust company concerned.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question in two parts to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) as follows:

1. Is there any truth in reports now current: (a) that the chairman of the conciliation board appointed to conciliate a dispute between the Royal York Hotel and Toronto local, operating engineers union, has suspended proceedings of the board on the grounds that, in his opinion, there is no basis for conciliation; (b) that the Toronto local has applied to the international headquarters of the union for authority for its members employed by the Royal York Hotel to go on strike?

2. If so, what action does the department plan to take in the light of these developments?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, I may say that the hearing before the conciliation board was held yesterday, Wednesday, March 14, 1962, at Toronto.

From inquiries which I have had made, I understand that full representations were made to the board, briefs were presented and efforts were made to bring about a settlement in the dispute. Our further understanding is that a settlement was not reached, and the board of conciliation is to consider and prepare a report which will be submitted to me as Minister of Labour, in accordance with the requirements of The Labour Relations Act.

No statement, I am informed, was made by any member of the board that the proceedings of the board were suspended on the grounds that there was no basis for conciliation. This board, composed of three men of long experience in this type of work, Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan, Mr. G. S. P. Ferguson and Mr. Drummond Wren, dealt with the problem in the ordinary way provided for by legislation. A settlement was not reached and I expect a report from the board in due course. I have no knowledge as to whether or not the Toronto local of the operating engineers union has sought permission from its international headquarters to engage in a strike.

A legal right to strike will not arise until the board of conciliation has reported to me, and seven days have elapsed after the report has been released to the parties.

As to the second part of the question, I am given to understand that the board urged the parties to resume negotiations upon receipt of the report and an assurance was given that this would be done. I think that we should await the outcome of these further negotiations, which will reveal whether or not any additional assistance is needed.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). While I think he will be able to answer today, perhaps he will want to take the—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask if this is the question submitted to the Speaker's office today.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the leader of the Opposition could hold the question? It came a little late to the Speaker's office and the answer is not available. I think it would be better from the point of view of procedure to keep the question and answer together.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make a big issue about this. I think you have made an informal arrangement that questions must be submitted to you. I would only make this suggestion to you, that some consideration be given at this session to debating the advisability of strict adherence to that particular arrangement.

I think you do have a point here, and I do not intend to make a big issue of it now. But it does put us at considerable disadvantage, because in respect to this particular question, we were advised that it would be in order to submit the question to you, and then subsequently we were advised that it was too late.

Now, I do not think that is exactly the way a House of this sort should operate.

I am going to say nothing more at this time. I presume you do not want me to ask the question and I will abide by your ruling. But I would ask, some time in your discretion, that an opportunity be provided that we debate the advisability of pursuing this rule religiously.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day, I should like to make an announcement concerning York University.

I am very glad to advise the House that, as a result of successful negotiations between ourselves and the federal government, a large site will be provided in North York township for the main campus of the university. The property is approximately 465 acres and is located on the south side of Steele's Avenue, running between Jane and Keele Streets. It will be transferred to York University free of charge.

I should like to express our appreciation of the federal government's co-operation and of its clear understanding of the university problem in this rapidly expanding part of the province. In particular, I would express our appreciation for the co-operation given us by Rt. Hon. Prime Minister Diefenbaker and the hon. David J. Walker, federal Minister of Public Works, who have both taken a personal interest in this matter.

The land in question is part of a 654-acre tract that was purchased in 1954 by the federal-provincial housing partnership and held in reserve to provide for future public housing needs in Metropolitan Toronto. It has now been determined that the property is surplus to those needs and can be given to York University without prejudice to the housing programme.

The book value of the land is approximately $1.3 million but its market value approaches $3 million. The federal government has agreed to sell its 75 per cent interest to the province on the basis of the book value plus interest and carrying charges. We, in turn, will deed the land to the university as an outright gift, to be used only for the purposes of education and research at the university level. Should it become unnecessary to use the land for these purposes, it will revert to the partnership on the same basis as it is presently held.

This acquisition will make possible the creation of new university facilities that will accommodate an estimated seven to ten thousand students within the next decade. It will fully satisfy the site requirements for university development in the Toronto area for some years to come.

Since the land acquired by the federal-provincial partnership in 1954, approximately 18 acres have been dedicated to North York township for park purposes and 36 acres of flood-land have been sold or donated to the Metropolitan Toronto conservation authority for Pioneer Village. During the past year, Metropolitan Toronto has asked the federal-provincial partnership to construct a rental housing project of approximately 500 units on some 100 acres fronting on Jane Street, to the west of the conservation authority property. This matter is under consideration at the present time and construction would presumably commence following the development of public housing projects in the Thistletown area, which projects are now being planned and will be started during the summer. Also, during the past year, negotiations have been under way in connection with a further 33 acres which the conservation authority wishes to purchase in order to expand the facilities in Pioneer Village.

This leaves the remainder of the property—approximately 465 acres. Last year, Metropolitan council came to the conclusion that this land was not required for housing purposes and that its acquisition for York University's main campus would in no way prejudice the housing programme which Metro has in view for the next 20 years. This decision has been endorsed by North York council, the Metropolitan Toronto housing authority and the Metropolitan Toronto conservation authority, which will be next-door neighbour to the university.

This step is of the greatest significance in the development of university facilities in the Metropolitan Toronto area. Within the area, as indeed throughout the whole province, the university picture is affected by three influential and interrelated factors; the first is that our population is expanding rapidly; the second is that the proportion of university age persons within our rapidly growing population is itself increasing quite markedly; and the third is that today we have a much larger proportion of our university age population desiring to go on to higher education.

It is estimated that by the early 1970's Ontario's university enrolment will be between 90,000 and 100,000, more than double the present enrolment. In order to meet this situation, the government has assisted in the establishment and development of a number of new universities, including the University of Waterloo, Essex College at Windsor, Laurentian University at Sudbury, the Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology and York University. I might say that our grants to universities have increased from a total of $19.3 million in the 1957-1958 fiscal year to $43.9 million in the coming year.

By the early 1970's the Metropolitan Toronto area will need university accommodation for at least 30,000 students. The University of Toronto has a registration of about 14,000 at the present time, but studies have indicated that its enrolment should not exceed 23,000 if it is to maintain its high academic standards and efficiency. This leaves a gap of 7,000 student places by 1970 in Metropolitan Toronto, a gap which can only be filled through the rapid but careful development of additional university facilities in the area.

York University was established in 1959. It opened in September of 1960 with 75 students in temporary accommodation on the University of Toronto campus. Last September, it moved to a new $2 million building, financed by the province, on the 82-acre Glendon Hall estate near Lawrence and Bayview Avenues. It now consists of 216 students and 32 faculty members. The latest studies indicate that the pace of York's development must be accelerated more rapidly than had previously been anticipated if the needs of the 1970's are to be met. A second university of major proportions must be provided in Metropolitan Toronto as soon as possible, consistent with sound educational planning.

Since its establishment in 1959, York University, in collaboration with the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and its constituent municipalities, has been looking for a site which would accommodate a large and growing university and which would be readily accessible to the rapidly expanding suburban population of Toronto. When it became apparent that these requirements would be ideally satisfied in the Keele-Jane-Steele's property, we undertook to negotiate with the federal government in order to acquire the federal interest. This has now been accomplished and we propose to deed the property to York University without charge.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) would permit a question arising from his most commendable statement?

There was an announcement in the Toronto papers a day or two ago that York University planned to spend, I think some $5 million, as I gathered, on their Glendon Hall property. In view of this announcement, will that be abandoned and will York University be able to take possession of this Steele's-Jane property immediately or reasonably soon?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this will be available to them immediately and I think it might very well result in some revamping of their plans, but I have not discussed this with the board of governors.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Roberts (Prime Minister) moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to. House in committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

On vote 301:

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, you may recall, sir, that I was on my feet when the House adjourned the other day in consideration of this estimate. I report to you that I followed with great care and great attention the lengthy introduction made by the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay), of his estimates; I followed with great care the remarks made thereafter by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), and my colleague the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden).

I have had an opportunity, of course, since hearing all that the other day, to assess the impact of all that occurred. And I felt, sir, that bearing in mind the great vigour and energy with which my hon. colleagues and the hon. member for Woodbine descended upon the hon. Minister, that perhaps he was not all that deserving of being completely damned, as he was.

I tell you, sir, that so far as I am concerned, the hon. Minister will, in my books and in the books of many other people resident in northern Ontario, go down in history as being one of the very first Tories that ever discovered northern Ontario. I think during the hectic campaign of late September and last October, the hon. Minister—more so than any other of his hon. colleagues—visited criss-cross and came back again and again to northern Ontario to meet and have close and personal contact with the very fine people who live up there north of the French.

Now, it has been a complaint for many a year—I speak now in reference of course to his announcement if you want me to keep close to vote 301; his announcement about the formation of a northern development committee, I think it was. The Sudbury Star at one time conducted a survey of the government of Ontario and found exactly six people—a Cabinet Minister and senior civil servants, charged with the responsibility of the administration of government—who were from northern Ontario.

Now I would not be one to guess that the total number—certainly we have 22 Cabinet Ministers, and if we added to that number all of those in senior positions of responsibility in the civil service, we would come up with, I think, quite a dramatic number of people. If we took, say, 200 people, then of the 200 the Sudbury Star discovered that there were exactly six who were either born in northern Ontario or had lived an appreciable part of their lives there.

For example, the name of one comes readily to mind and that is the Deputy Minister of Labour (Mr. Metzler). He is a northerner and apparently, aside from the two hon. Ministers that we have from the north, there are exactly three more. I never took the trouble to identify who they are.

So, in this new attention to northern Ontario that is testified to in the estimates of the hon. Minister's department, we are entitled on the one hand, of course, to look at it very warily and very cautiously, but then on the other hand, to be fair, one must commend these forward steps so far as they result in some concrete action to enhance and forward the development of that great area that comprises some four-fifths of the land area of this province.

I just want to say in that connection that I have had the feeling since I have been in this House that there may be those souls, there may be those sceptical souls, who are inclined to treat our special problems and pleas for the development of the area, our cries for the establishment of secondary industry, for the expansion of our natural resources and industries; there may be those who are sceptics, and we have heard the pleas and the cries and the wails for so long now that the effect of those pleas has somewhat been mitigated and vitiated. Therefore, sir, I say, by the establishment of this committee, perhaps the hon. Minister is going to take a new tangent, bring about a resuscitation and a revivification of activity in northern Ontario; and it may be—and I would never be so political as to say that I would decry the approach of the golden age. That was his phrase.

I think that was borrowed from classical times. But if the approach of the golden age is at hand, though it may do great damage to us politically, I would put that aside and go forward into the mighty expansion of the last part of this century with him, and I hope it comes about.

Now there may be some in northern Ontario, sir, who are still a bit sceptical because I note that the Sudbury Star had taken note of the hon. Minister's visits there last autumn; they had to this to say, and I will just quote a portion to show the scepticism that still remains, and perhaps I should add for the purpose of keeping the record straight that the Sudbury Star is not an organ of public opinion that is known very often to speak in endearing terms of the Liberal Party—shall we put it that way? I might add they do not support the ND Party either. But they had this to say:

The leadership race has taken on every appearance of a provincial general election in the bid for support. Northern Ontario hasn't had as much attention in years as some of the candidates make a pitch for the vote of northern Ontario delegates to the leadership convention. But the north is not likely to be swayed by Johnny-come-lately concern for northern Ontario.

Now they might have changed that to "is not likely to be swayed by Robert-come-lately concern for northern Ontario." That would, in fact, sound a little bit more musical, or poetic.

The record of past performance by aspiring candidates is more solid meat than vote-catching platitudes and the support of some Cabinet Ministers for other Cabinet Ministers will not cut much ice as far as northern Ontario opinion is concerned.

Well, that is the way the Sudbury Star looks at it and that is the measure against which that journal and a great many other people in northern Ontario will measure the results of this.

During the course of the hon. Minister's presentation, by way of friendly rejoinder with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), he uttered that this presentation was only part of the election platform. I submit, sir, then, if this is part of the election platform, that we are perhaps entitled at the same time to put our election platform forward. I hastily add, we are not going to do that. We will choose our own time and place for unveiling that very significant and historic document so important to the future of this province.

I would submit, sir, perhaps more seriously, that we are entitled to evaluate the hon. Minister's statements made here by a comparison with utterances made by him on previous occasions.

Specifically, in regard to that, the hon. Minister, during the very exacting and hectic period of speech-making last autumn, unveiled before the public of Ontario what amounted to a four-point programme. It was basically a four-point programme that he was offering and his four points are summed up by the report in the Toronto Telegram, well-known for its accuracy especially when it is reporting anything said by Conservative Ministers.

Apparently, these were the four points. He would set up an Ontario economic council to set job standards, time limits, price-tags, so that production will increase and costs fall; second, he would establish an Ontario development fund of millions of dollars, which would help create new industries in pockets of unemployment and assist the agricultural and tourist industries; third, he would open a marketing branch that would parallel and sometimes overlap federal activities in this field; fourth, he would combine The Departments of Economics, Energy Resources, and Commerce and Development.

It is interesting to note, sir—and one will immediately see, who follows such things—that, of the four planks in his platform, he has substantially effected the completion and realization of two. He has combined The Department of Economics, and Commerce and Development. He has not yet effected the combination of those two departments with The Department of Energy Resources, but I suppose that is in the works and perhaps, before the end of this session, we may expect to see legislation that will see the realization of his complete dream in that regard.

I do not know what he will call it, how he will combine all those terms, economics, energy, commerce and development, and I do not suppose he will ask me either, when he is dreaming up the name to put on it. He has effected the establishment of the Ontario Economic Council. Two of his dreams he has not yet realized; that is, the Ontario development fund. He is on the way—I am in error, and I like to be the first to admit my error; he has in fact, realized the effecting of three dreams, because apparently, plans are going forward apace to open the marketing branches, and I should like to say something about that a little later.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to draw your attention to this. As I understood the words of the hon. Minister, the other day, in respect of the Ontario development fund, I should like to dwell upon that for a moment; I copied those words down. He said he did not know if it was government policy to go ahead with it. He said he was taking steps to initiate a study of its feasibility and practicality, by the Ontario Economic Council, and in that regard, he said—almost in parenthesis—that he did not know whether it was government policy to go ahead with it.

Well, I think one does not torture the language too much if one says that his meaning of that phrase, "he does not know if it is government policy to go ahead with it," the real meaning is: "It is not government policy to go ahead with it." I assume it has been discussed in, at least, the circles of the Treasury board, perhaps on a broader Cabinet level, and apparently, for the time being, we are entitled to assert that all the Treasury benches, and those responsible for government policy, have turned "thumbs down" on it.

The hon. Minister shakes his head. I will leave that. Let me come back to his earlier assertion that he was going to ask the economic council to study the feasibility of it. Now I have the hon. Minister nodding, and I always like to be in agreement with the hon. Minister. Last October, one would not have leaped to the conclusion that the hon. Minister felt there was much necessity for study. Not at all. He had his mind made up. We have our minds made up. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), in his very masterful, eloquent and very learned presentation in reply to the motion of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), asserted where we stand in respect to the establishment of a development fund and I do not recall that the hon. member for Bruce, anywhere along the line, said that it was our intention to set up a committee or ask any other body to look into the practicality of the establishment of that fund.

On the contrary. But the hon. member for Bruce said—and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has said it on many, many occasions—that it is part and parcel of the Liberal Party platform, and our intention when charged with the responsibility of office, is to make a fund of this nature available for the stimulation of secondary industry, tourist operators and any other worthy project in the economic life of this province.

The hon. Minister agrees with us. He agrees with us because, from place to place throughout Ontario last autumn, when he was making his speeches, he was quite specific and he was quite definite on this and he even had the figures. He said: "We will make $100 million available." Oh, yes. I refer to the Cornwall Standard, October 7; he said funds which would be available to such a development branch may reach a hundred million dollars. Well, he might have been thinking of five dollars, he might have been thinking of $25. You see, he gave himself lots of leeway, but he said, he certainly held out and dangled, that nice round figure of $100 million.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): He was appealing to the people of Cornwall.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes. My hon. friend from Stormont, Mr. Chairman, has said that he was appealing to the people of Cornwall at that time. Well, we saw in these other clippings that he used that figure in other places in the province. You see, we take a great interest, Mr. Chairman, in the hon. Minister. I am the first one to say—let me be the first one to say—that I have a great deal of respect for the hon. Minister who leads this department.

I admire his mental agility. I admire his intelligence. I admire the amount of learning that he has amassed. I might say, though—so that I do not damn him with faint praise—I might say that he would be well-advised to ask the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) which Dale Carnegie school it is that he goes to; that he might attend with him there and take two or three quick courses. In addition to learning French, I might say. Well, I think I have made my point.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): Which point was that?

Mr. Sopha: Well, I will sum it up for the hon. Minister again. Last October he did not need any studies, but today when we hear that it is not government policy, that this is another of the items that is going to the great repository of problems, the Ontario Economic Council—and almost wherever one turns now, in these buildings, in the last few days since this organization was established, one hears ricocheting off the walls, that before action is taken in that particular problem, it will be studied by the economic council.

The vice-chairman of Hydro, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) yesterday used it at least twice, at the meeting of the committee of energy that, "Oh, well, we will give this to the economic council and see what they do with it and then we will find out what it is all about." The economic council, I venture to say, is a permanent Royal commission.

Now it is a pity, Mr. Chairman, that we did not have available to us the Hansard reports of the hon. Minister's remarks, but many of us kept careful note of what he said, and I want to turn to his remarks so far as they concern foreign trade.

Be it remembered, Mr. Chairman, I invite you to remember, as I invite all hon. members of the House to remember, that the hon. Minister sits for the same constituency in this House as does the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in the federal government.

We must assume that, sitting for the same constituency, there is an accord between them. I would help the hon. Minister along in his learning of the French language by saying, as the French would say, we would think they have established a rapport between them. Well, it is an English word that is borrowed from the French. And I see the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) by his nod, agrees with me that it is French, and if the English have borrowed it, then that is all right.

Now no one could quarrel with any proposal which would effect an increased sale of our bacon, our butter, our cheese, our electronic products, our nickel, our forest products, and everything else that we have to sell on the world market—and, I might add, even our tomato juice—no one could quarrel with that. But for one who attempts to understand such things, it brings somewhat of a feeling of regret, because so far as the expansion of foreign trade is concerned, that is strictly a matter of federal jurisdiction, and to the extent that the hon. Minister wants to increase his empire by the establishment of marketing agencies in Chicago, Los Angeles, Prague, London, Paris, Rome or anywhere else—to that extent he is encroaching on federal jurisdiction.

My observation is this: I said he sits for the same constituency as the federal Minister of Trade and Commerce, they are probably very great friends; cannot this object be effected then by the stimulation of the federal government and specifically the urging of The Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa to assume the responsibility for such matters?

I have said before, and it bears repeating, that this government is always pleading penury, is pleading that it has no money to meet the responsibilities that it is required to meet under section 92 of the British North America Act. Each year we go farther into debt and have to borrow in the money market and, to that extent, mortgage our future. I feel I am entitled to say, and perhaps I will in that way merely reflect the thoughts of many other hon. members of this House, that we have enough responsibility in looking after those things that are purely provincial without encroaching on matters of federal jurisdiction and for which the federal government is financially responsible.

I am not one of those who can look askance upon a department of this government expanding its area of jurisdiction and increasing the personnel, increasing its responsibilities—if that be accompanied with any sinister motive of expansion and the building of empire for its own sake. Or, put it another way, soon a federal election campaign will descend upon us and it may be that I and others on this side of the House will be called upon to assist our colleagues, our brethren at Ottawa, in endeavouring to enhance their fortunes. I do not suppose we will turn them down, I do not suppose they will turn us down if we ask them, but I think it would be a legitimate criticism of the federal government if we said that in the field of the cultivation of foreign trade, the expansion of the sale of our exports, the federal government has demonstrated great failure.

They have demonstrated that failure conclusively, because last spring in the Ontario Legislature the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, Mr. Chairman, in the presentation of his estimates, said to us that he wanted a sum of money voted from the public Treasury of Ontario for the purpose of opening marketing agencies abroad; and now we in Ontario have to take the tax dollars that we collect in order to pay for something that is basically and exclusively and peculiarly a matter of federal jurisdiction.

Now, the next thing I would like to speak on, sir, is the hon. Minister's remarks concerning the tourist industry. I approach this with great caution, but I approach this also in the spirit of the knowledge that we in our party have assessed the problems of the tourist industry and on occasion have made remarks about the ills that bother the tourist industry; we have advocated the specific proposals that we would take to assist the tourist industry. Now again, the hon. Minister, in his manifesto—the Macaulay manifesto it might be called—of March, 1962, said that, so far as the tourist industry is concerned, its problems again would go to the Ontario Economic Council. A sub-committee of that council would be formed and the sub-committee would be asked to investigate the tourist industry and make a report, so far as remedial action is concerned, to help.

I say to him, sir, through you, unequivocally, that so far as the tourist industry in this province is concerned, we have had enough studies. We have had enough reports. And what is bothering and militating against the expansion of the tourist industry is well known. My hon. colleague from Bruce (Mr. Whicher) put it very ably and very effectively, and it bears repeating, that if the hon. Minister does not know what is wrong with the tourist industry and what it needs to assist it, then the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) has failed in his job. And I would add that—

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might just remind the hon. member that, during the year of 1961, Ontario enjoyed 74.4 per cent of the total of Canada's travel business. That is the figure arrived at by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I do not know whether he wants 100 per cent or not.

Mr. Sopha: Well then, if such be the case, why is the hon. Minister of Economics and Development studying it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Since the hon. member has asked a question; if he had looked at the terms of reference of the Ontario Economic Council, which will come under that vote, and I was rather hoping that we could deal with it all at once in that way, he will find that there is a necessity for some kind of a study to determine what financial assistance, if any, can be given to the tourist industry. This is a matter of very serious study, something that does require some study.

There is another fact. With the great changing habits of trading blocs and of people, it is necessary to do a continuing study of these matters, in addition to which the hon. Minister has said he has the responsibility for administering certain aspects of this matter. But there are changing aspects of the tourist industry which must be marked. There are other aspects which do not generally come under his department and what we want to do is generally, with his co-operation—in fact he was one of the ones who promoted this—to make sure that we were doing everything that is possible to aid in collecting and garnering into this province the maximum number of tourist dollars. I would think he would want that.

Mr. Sopha: I do not want to seem to be pig-headed, but it is exactly what I do not want. The hon. Minister in his remarks, passed to me by the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson), said some of the subjects to be studied by the committee on tourism will be the development of suitable attractions and facilities, camping sites, historical sites, domestic and foreign, advertising, government aid and services, liquor policy, financial assistance, through an Ontario development fund and other matters.

Now, beyond asking the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity about the tourist industry, I was going to invite the hon. Minister to ask the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner). There is a man, capable administrator that he is, a man who, like the hon. Minister himself, keeps himself informed about the affairs of his department and the northern part of the province, who is in contact with tourist outfitters almost continually throughout each calendar year. All the hon. Minister need do is turn to him and ask him what the tourist outfitters want and need; and the hon. Minister need not set up a committee of experts in order to study these things. The answers are there.

I say to you, sir, and I might remind the hon. Minister, that last October, when he was speech-making, he said time and time again that what the tourist industry needed was money, funds—and we will take the trouble to dig out the clipping here. He got very specific on the score. He said they cannot get the money from the Industrial Development Bank; he said they cannot get it through the ordinary bank-lending services. Sometimes if they borrow it through private sources they have to pay as much as 22 per cent interest—that was the very figure he used.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is quite correct.

Mr. Sopha: Well, if such be the case, then what is the necessity for a study of the committee of the Ontario Economic Council?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well now, my hon. friend wants to have, I am sure, a fair and reasonable debate on this, to find exactly where the need is; exactly how these people can best be helped; how the money can be raised; what returns should be expected; what kind of indentures should be given. There are a great many things to be decided long before one gets up and pounds the table about whether something needs to be done or not, this is something I want.

Mr. Sopha: I never pound the table, Mr. Chairman, but I want to say in very moderate tones that there are two problems that face the tourist industry; and if the hon. Minister will allow me to enunciate them—I have struggled to enunciate one of them—one of them is lack of capital. We do not need a committee, I say, to study historic sites.

We have the great, wonderful panorama of the outdoors, provided throughout the province by a merciful providence, which is an asset to be sold to visitors who come from abroad and want to sojourn with us. What the tourist operators need on that score is the availability of ready capital, in order to expand and improve their facilities. Now the second thing they need is a revision of the liquor laws. We have enunciated the specific revision in this House, and I daresay that we do not need a committee to look into what revision of the liquor laws is required.

I sum it up, sir, without going into the details of the necessary vision, and I borrow the very colourful phrase of the late member for Kenora, Mr. Wren, when he said all you need do with respect to the tourist outfitters of this province is take away from them the necessity of being law-breakers and bootleggers. That sums it up, and the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) will know what I mean in that regard. Give them the right to offer to their guests, who come from jurisdictions where the liquor laws are more rational and more flexible, and more broadminded—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Where is that?

Mr. Sopha: Many of the American jurisdictions. Many of them.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: On a point of order, is it necessary to debate the liquor laws under this vote also?

Mr. Sopha: Certainly. I have just read in the speech, where the hon. Minister paid it up. I make the same general comment. The hon. Minister calls to your attention, Mr. Chairman, that I ought not to be dealing with the Ontario Economic Council, and I hope he will not impose upon you or me the strictures that he would use to prohibit me under this vote from making reference to it, because it is difficult to discuss his 20-point manifesto without making reference to the Ontario Economic Council.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is the next vote along.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I understand that; I too have eyes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If the hon. member understands that, why did he say that he cannot discuss it? He can discuss it under the next vote along; that is where to discuss it. He knows that.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister misunderstood what I said. I think that it is difficult to discuss the other things in his 20-point programme, without discussing the Ontario Economic Council.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, then, discuss it all under that heading.

An hon. member: Including liquor?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, if he wants to discuss liquor twice, then take this as part of my programme.

Mr. Sopha: Very well. I do not want to monopolize the time of the House. I thought some of these observations I made might be helpful to him.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, they are helpful; but let us give them under the proper heading.

Mr. Sopha: Very well. Perhaps the House will be kind enough to grant me the indulgence to speak once more under that vote. When we come to the Ontario Economic Council—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We will look forward to it.

Mr. Sopha: Thank you. There is one other thing under the main office that I want to mention and I hesitate to approach it. I really do.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. member has not convinced anybody yet.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, I find it difficult when I wax serious, and I think of myself as such a serious person. That is in respect of the reorganization of these departments. The Department of Economics and The Department of Commerce and Development—the hon. Minister, as we know, became the responsible Minister for both, and I should like to ask him, and I ask him very respectfully, that since the Legislature passed the legislation combining these departments, is it a fact that some senior civil servants in those departments, have found that they cannot carry on and have tendered to him their resignations?

Specifically, would he inform us whether Mr. F. J. Lyle, head of the trade and industry branch, a civil servant for 25 years, who has served this province full and faithfully for 25 years, has tendered his resignation to the hon. Minister; and if he has so tendered his resignation, is it that he is going to other employment or is it for other reasons? Because, in the loss of Mr. Lyle, as I said, we lose a senior civil servant who has been engaged in government service for 25 years; and his special knowledge that has been accumulated over that quarter of a century will mean a very great loss.

Then I should like to also ask him whether there are other senior people in The Department of Commerce and Development who have seen fit to tender their resignations to the hon. Minister since he became head of that department—particularly in respect of one, so far as information comes to us, is concerned. I hope the hon. Minister will correct me, but on the basis of our information one of the senior persons in the department, specifically the head of the public relations department, Miss Rosemary Dudley, was dismissed by the hon. Minister. As a result of that dismissal, and replacement by some other persons, Miss Dudley filed a grievance with the grievance committee of the civil service.

I do not know whether that case has been heard or not but apparently this testifies to some dislocation and some dissatisfaction among the senior civil servants; and let me hastily add, Mr. Chairman, that we in the Opposition are not interested in cultivating disunity, but we have a concern and a duty and an entitlement to know that the civil servants of this province function smoothly, satisfactorily, and efficiently. It is for those reasons only that I have asked those questions of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member that I quite agree with him that the Opposition as well as the government has a great interest in seeing that the civil service is operating functionally and contentedly, and so forth, and this has been my interest in the department.

He has asked me three questions in relation to employees. One: whether there was a resignation of Colonel Lyle; has it been submitted to me? It has not been submitted to me, but it has been submitted to the Deputy Minister, Mr. Gathercole. As to his reasons for resigning, I am not aware. As you may well know, Colonel Lyle has retired once before, and I understand, at least it was suggested to me, somebody did, that he might go back to Ottawa to work in relation to the Colombo Plan.

I cannot say why it is that he is resigning. He is within a very short distance of retiring from the civil service in any event; and when I came to the department, he indicated to the Deputy Minister that we would want to make a number of extensive reorganizations, perhaps, and that, in that case, he would be more than happy to resign or to retire, or act as an adviser or act in any capacity that I would like.

Now the second question that was asked of me: have any others resigned? I am unaware of any others, and I am advised that there are not.

Thirdly, as far as Miss Dudley is concerned, I did not discharge Miss Dudley. Last year, as you may recall from reading Hansard, there was a great deal of criticism of the public relations and publicity aspect of The Department of Commerce and Development, as it was then. I removed the section. There are no longer any public relations or publicity people on the staff.

This was one way I felt that we could economize, reduce the staff; and I might just tell you, as a matter of fact, that I have fewer employees today in the three departments that I manage than were handled by the former hon. Minister (Mr. Nickle) last year in one department. I have done my very best to economize, but to look after the interests of all these people involved. It would be perfectly ridiculous to go on, I felt, with the public relations department, with people able and trained to do that job, if I did not want to have that branch in that department for which I did not think there was a need.

I feel that, in The Department of Economics and Development, all of the public relations will be in action, not in terms of what goes into the newspaper. What I want to do or to have, as hon. members indicated yesterday, what we want in this province, are action and results. That is what I am going to try to give. As far as Miss Dudley is concerned, she did grieve. She grieved to the grievance board, and the grievance board refused her grievance on the ground that, under the civil service regulations, the job having disappeared there was no ground for the grievance.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take a great length of time this afternoon. On the other hand, I do not apologize for participating in the general discussion prior to this consideration of these estimates because I think it can be said without any fear of contradiction that there are few issues in Canadian public life at the moment that are being debated more vigorously than the question of economic planning—exactly what constitutes economic planning.

It is no secret that the party I have the honour of leading is a party which has been dedicated to the concept of economic planning from the very time that it came into being as the CCF some 25 or 30 years ago. There are many people who, up until a few months ago, as I would like to relate a little later, were decrying economic planning. Now it just may be that those of us who have been giving detailed consideration to this concept may have something worthwhile to contribute to a general debate; not with any suggestion that we have any final answers, that we are being dogmatic about it; but certainly in recent years economic planning, in many forms, has become the basic approach of government in other than the North American continent. It may well be that the persistent problems which the North American continent now has to contend with as it watches western Europe—that hitherto it regarded with a degree of condescension—with its booming economy, can be solved only through planning. We may have to take a look at how these other parts of the world are doing it and apply some of their approach, namely, economic planning, here on the North American continent.

Now, with regard to the hon. Minister's presentation of some 20 points: as points, they all have a degree of merit. Some of them are new; most of them are painfully old. They are something that has been trotted out in every election for quite some time.

In this great economic potpourri which the hon. Minister presents to us—if I may use another French word, since we are acknowledging the brethren in the rest of this

Canadian family this afternoon—in this great economic potpourri while there is merit in many of the isolated propositions that he puts forward, my chief criticism is that this does not constitute economic planning. As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister himself, with the assistance of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), said that this was their election platform. Not completely—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, no! On a point of privilege, I want to correct this. I left this when the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) was speaking because he was speaking in a facetious mood. While I was presenting the 20 points the hon. member for Sudbury interjected into what I was saying by saying that this was—and I think Hansard will bear me out—that this was our election programme. I said no such thing. During the course of the year I expect that if we were in the future to have an election, some time in a year or two from now, I am hoping very much that this kind of a programme would produce a platform on which we could go to the country. I am not looking at this in a partisan, political way, but simply as an economic programme that I think is good for this province.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister has said that it is not the government's election programme, that he hopes the election programme is going to emerge out of it. I will not argue with him on this point.

In fact, I think one of the reasons one should reserve judgment on each of these isolated 20 points is that if they are tackled with vigour, certainly there is always possible improvement, particularly in a fast-changing world. But I repeat: my basic criticism is that when hon. members add it all up, it does not constitute economic planning on the basis of the experience of Britain or France or Sweden or the rest of Europe. It has gross deficiencies in terms of any basic economic planning.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Our economy is better, though, than theirs.

Mr. MacDonald: Well now, Mr. Chairman, this may be, since I just made this point a moment ago and apparently it went over the head of the hon. Minister. The point is that our economy is not necessarily better than theirs.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Did the hon. member read this?

Mr. MacDonald: The fact of the matter is that the economies of Europe today, because of the basic economic planning, are booming. They are increasing their standards of living in a part of the world that has less natural resources upon which to build the standard of living. They have full employment, whereas here on the North American continent we are struggling along with persistent unemployment. If we do not do something by way of basic economic planning, then that threat of Mr. Krushchev when he came here a year or so ago will become a real one. He said that he wanted peace. Sure he wants peace, because he says: "In 10 years we will bury you." And they will bury us.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: They have more unemployment than we have, and they will never bury us.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. They will bury us on the basis of a 6 or an 8 or a 10 or even a 12 per cent increase in gross national products, while we struggle along with a 3 or a 4 per cent increase if it is very good; sometimes no increase and sometimes a decline.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Would the hon. member soon live there than here? Does he think he would live as well? He knows their standard of living is lower than ours.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): That is not the issue.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the issue, Mr. Chairman, if he is repeating this absurd, irrelevant comment—that I would sooner live over there—again this is too inane to deal with, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Look at the record!

Mr. MacDonald: In the programme that the government has presented, Mr. Chairman, in the planning of the economy, there certainly is a role for the economic council that he has set up. As my hon. colleague from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has pointed out, our chief criticism is that the role this council can play is going to be a less effective one, in fact is going to be in great measure an ineffective one, because it is only an advisory body and we have yet to see evidence that the government is willing to take action. If it were taking the action—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member will have a chance to talk later. Please do not interrupt at every point along the way. I listened to his 20 points.

It is described as advisory, though its chief function is to conduct the studies. If it were a serious body and this government were doing some serious economic planning, then the function of a body of this kind in terms of establishing a working relationship with those who were appointed to the economic council, would be a very useful and valuable one.

Mr. Chairman, I want to proceed to the presentation of the Liberal group in the House; not in any provocative sense because, once again, in considering the problem of economic planning, I am interested to what extent their approach differs.

The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) tended to dismiss the observations of the hon. Minister as being words, not being followed through with the kind of action we need. He is right, but you know, Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully and I found the words with little action that were presented by the hon. Minister were matched by another group of words from the hon. leader of the Opposition.

This does not surprise me, because no less than one year ago the hon. leader of the Opposition, standing right where he is today in this House, rose when we were discussing the idea of economic planning, and dismissed it. He said he was opposed to economic planning because this was socialism—that what he was in favour of was economic co-ordination.

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a matter of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman, I never said any such thing.

Now, it is all right to make these general observations. The simple fact is that to the best of my recollection I advocated planning last year. But this I am sure: I never did associate planning with socialism as such.

Mr. MacDonald: Surely they are the same thing. That is the interesting point. See; now the hon. leader of the Opposition has got to the point!

Now just a minute, Mr. Chairman, this is why the general debate is useful. Now we have reached the point where at least planning has ceased to be a dirty word.

An hon. member: It has been like that for years.

Mr. MacDonald: When we have reached that point the hon. member has got to recognize that this is what they used to describe as socialism.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And the hon. member is saying that he is not socialist! Is he or is he not?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister—just a minute; I am not saying that—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Wintermeyer: What did the hon. member do in Ottawa if he did not say that they were not socialists?

Mr. MacDonald: We are democratic socialists, we never for a moment denied it.

An hon. member: Imagine trying to deny that.

Mr. MacDonald: If I may just get this record straight, Mr. Chairman, since the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) feels that I am misrepresenting it. Let me quote something that I quoted in the House before, but perhaps we have to have it reviewed.

A year ago when the federal Liberals were laying down policy at their annual meeting at Ottawa, a committee met and they passed resolutions and I am going to quote from the news story that recounted what happened on this occasion as it appeared in the Globe and Mail on January 11—

An hon. member: What year?

Mr. MacDonald: Last year.

Despite some misgivings that its recommendation was a step towards socialism a subcommittee of the national Liberal rally today called on the party to adopt a policy of national economic planning. Approval of the recommendation would represent a sharp change in the attitude of the Liberal Party.

In May 1958, the Liberals joined the Conservatives in voting down a Co-operative Commonwealth Federation amendment urging the adoption of planned economic policies to ensure an ever-rising standard of living.

J. W. Pickersgill (Liberal, Bonavista) told the House of Commons his party was opposed to the amendment because it was a polite synonym for socialism.

Now this is the sort of thing we have heard repeatedly from the Liberals; however, I am not going to berate them, Mr. Chairman. If they have now reached the advanced stage of acknowledging the existence and the need for planning, whether or not they want to call it "socialism" is neither here nor there—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): What is the hon. member trying to prove?

Mr. MacDonald: It was no more than a year ago—I call it a form of socialism if you want to—

Mr. Reaume: Is he or is he not?

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact the basic requirement, if we are going to have full employment, is economic planning.

An hon. member: What does the hon. member's planning consist of?

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, Mr. Chairman, as the leader, or as my colleague from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) said the other day: one of the things we have noted with interest is that while the programme of the CCF and the New Democratic Party is usually decried as something of a threat to the people of Canada, etc., etc., periodically the old parties will take great portions of that programme and incorporate it in their own.

An hon. member: How many by-elections has the hon. member's party won?

Mr. MacDonald: The things they decry today, they accept tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: I will give you time, Mr. Chairman, if you want to see if you can muzzle—but as my hon. colleague from Woodbine has said, what has happened in this instance is that both the government and the Liberals have stolen the word but they have not stolen the idea. They have not yet come to grips with economic planning in any meaningful sense at all. As a matter of fact I was rather interested last fall when the Toronto Daily Star, which considers itself in the left wing of the Liberal Party trying to lead it to greater enlightenment, appeared with an editorial on November 28, after Mitchell Sharp had delivered a speech in the city. It was entitled: "Planning or Direction?"

Even they were wondering whether we should avoid economic planning and only have economic direction. You see, Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of waffling that is going on in the ranks, when they cannot make up their mind exactly what is wanted.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will the hon. member tell us what he means?

Mr. MacDonald: It is reminiscent—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: This kind of waffling is the kind of thing that we have seen, for example, among close associates of the Liberal party and the Conservatives in the chamber of commerce.

An hon. member: Hazen Argue.

Mr. MacDonald: Last fall, when they met in the city of Halifax, one of the most interesting speeches was Mr. Kirkpatrick's, in which he said that the plight that we now face in this country is in good part because the government did not plan. Mr. Kirkpatrick and E. P. Taylor were two of the resounding voices that came from the chamber of commerce meeting calling for economic planning. The interesting thing, Mr. Chairman, is that since then Mr. Kirkpatrick has ceased talking about economic planning, in that very undemocratic organization of his that did not give its rank and file an opportunity to express their approval; the directors have since launched what is described as "Operation Freedom." One of the things they are condemning all the time, in all of their literature is economic planning. Apparently Mr. Kirkpatrick has changed his mind since the Halifax conference.

An hon. member: I cannot conceive of Kirkpatrick being misled.

Mr. MacDonald: And just yesterday, Mr. Chairman, we had an indication when my hon. colleague was putting on the record what our concept of economic planning was—and I invite the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) to read it if he still does not know—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: —I know it does not sound very good to the hon. member. This is the interesting thing, and this is the point I want to reiterate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: While my hon. colleague was explaining what economic planning was, the hon. leader of the Opposition who, like Saul on the road to Damascus, has suddenly seen the light on this issue in the last year, was saying: "Fine, I am in favour of it; that is Liberal policy." One seat back from him was another voice in the Liberal party, what I might term as the chamber of commerce voice, who said: "You are leading us up the primrose path to dictatorship!" Or to socialism, was it?

It reminds me of that phrase that was used about somebody being dragged kicking and squealing into the 20th century; well the Liberal party is being dragged kicking and squealing into the era of economic planning, and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple) is standing there guarding us because of its threat to our liberty.

On this question of whether or not this is socialism, let us cut out all the nonsense of trying to abuse this term. In a moment of truth, last summer, the Toronto Globe and Mail had an editorial in which they made, I submit, a very valid point. They said there is no party today which is not a socialist party. They said the difference between the old parties, the Liberals and Conservatives, and the new party, is that the New Democratic party will bring its socialism in the front door, whereas the Liberal and Conservative parties would smuggle it in the back door.

I wish Macpherson, Reidford, or one of the cartoonists, would make a cartoon, because at the back door—to guard the back door of the Liberal party—is the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple) trying to keep socialism from being smuggled in. I think it has the making of rather a good cartoon.

However, you know, Mr. Chairman, if we needed any further proof of the basic similarity in the approach of the Liberals and Conservatives on this, we had it from that inimitable intellectual of the Liberal party, Jack Pickersgill. A couple of days ago he was speaking to the Liberals on the campus at the University of Toronto—

An hon. member: A big crowd there.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, 50 people! When I spoke there there were 120 people last fall. It was the new party, and a much bigger meeting. Mr. Chairman, let me quote one paragraph in this because this is a most illuminating little paragraph:

Answering New Party charges that there is no difference between Liberals and Conservatives, Mr. Pickersgill admitted—

An hon. member: You had better have it right now.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I would say is that I have always regarded him as one of the most Pickwickian figures in the Canadian scene. However, what Mr. Pickersgill admitted was that "there was little ideological difference between the two parties." And note this next sentence, Mr. Chairman. He said:

However, this was because it was because it was impossible to find out what the Tory ideologies were.

This presumably proves something. He cannot find out what the Tory ideologies were—an irrelevant point; for he had already conceded that there was no difference between them and his own.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What does the next sentence say?

An hon. member: Read the whole speech.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it is in the next one that they are going to boost old age pensions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if I am not digressing too far from the estimates, I am willing to read this because it is calling for a $75 pension, a thing that his leader decried as irresponsible in November of last fall. So this is just added proof of what goes on in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is the hon. member against the $75?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to attempt to give in detail our concept of economic planning. The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has already put it on the record, and it is there available for people to read, both in his budget speech and his introduction of the estimates here. But I want to make this point, Mr. Chairman, because I think this is basic in our consideration of this whole concept of economic planning—I want to submit that the government's approach is in reverse to what it should be. What the government is doing is taking a lot of isolated projects—unfortunately most of them are old—he is adding them up and calling it economic planning. He misses George Drew's programme of 20 years ago by two points; it is only a 20-point programme. Having listed all his projects, the hon. Minister, figuratively speaking, crosses his fingers and says: "We hope this will provide full employment."

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I did not say that at all.

Mr. MacDonald: He said this is going to provide a six or perhaps an eight per cent increase in the gross provincial product.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I said I was confident that it would create a six per cent increase to the provincial product and I was hopeful of eight per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, fine. Now, I want to suggest that this is going about it the wrong way. If the hon. Minister would be serious he may conceivably learn something. It may be impossible, but he might conceivably learn something.

I would suggest in general terms, Mr. Chairman, that the objective and procedure in economic planning should be this: The objective is to provide full employment—we are going to put all our people to work—the fullest possible use of the human and the natural resources of this country.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Can the hon. member guarantee that?

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly; we feel we can guarantee it. Just listen and I will say why we feel that we can guarantee it. We set the objective, full employment, and then, as one aspect of economic planning, provide the incentives in the private sector of the economy. My hon. colleague, speaking on the budget, listed some of these incentives. They seemed to come as new ideas to many people. With these incentives we will get the fullest possible development of economic activity in the private sector.

Here, Mr. Chairman, if I may pause and emphasize for a moment, if the government were doing this kind of thing, this is where the economic council could play a very important role. Instead of being an advisory body which is brought in just to study or talk, the economic council made up of the right kind of people—perhaps on an industrial basis, rather than this broader basis—could together work out objectives.

This is the kind of thing that is done in western Europe; and these people work it out jointly. This is how we get genuine labour-management relationships. They are then willing to set themselves an objective and to go out and co-operate in fulfilling that objective.

Fine, the hon. leader of the Opposition is not objecting to this, but may I remind him that this is not the kind of economic council the government has set up, nor is it the kind of economic council that he has been planning for the last year or so.

Having developed all the incentives for the fullest possible development of economic activity in the private sector, I would submit that this government should do everything it could to step up the co-operative sector of the economy. One of the shocking things in this country—I noticed this figure the other day in the newsletter of the Co-operative Union of Canada—is that in the whole of Canada only 2 per cent of our economic activity is on a co-operative basis.

I must confess that I was surprised by this; I thought it would be at least somewhat higher than that. Co-ops are the finest kind of economic activity, because the problem of economic control rests in the hands of the membership, and they do not have all the problems that emerge in private exercise of economic power. It seems to me that it is a desirable objective to step up co-operative activity.

But, Mr. Chairman, I was impressed, in reading through the same newsletter, where the Co-operative Union of Canada was outlining the mounting campaign that is emerging from the chambers of commerce, and other sources, to cripple co-operative activity at a time when we should be developing it.

My final point is this, Mr. Chairman, that if you start out with the objective that you are going to have full employment—the full uses of the human resources—and you have discovered what can be achieved in the private sector, and what can be done by the encouragement of the development of the co-operative sector; it then becomes the obligation of government to step in in the public sector of the economy and do whatever is necessary to make certain that everybody is at work.

Now this does not mean, in the old socialist terms that are so often used, that a great deal need be brought under public ownership, for the great need today is not for socializing more; rather the desperate need today, in a Galbraithian sense, is to develop the public sector of the economy which in the last 10 or 15 years has become the withered arm of our economy, to provide social capital, which will meet the needs of our people and at the same time provide work.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Hazen Argue did not believe that, how does the hon. member expect we will?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member does not know what Hazen Argue believes, and if he got to know him he might be surprised to find what he believes. Perhaps the hon. member at the moment should go out and consult with the young Liberals of Weyburn who at least have the courage to express their views.

However, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to touch briefly on two points. In the course of his remarks, the hon. Minister quite rightly made this observation, that he is moving forward into some experimenting to step up our economic activity. And he said, if on any one of these projects, we discover that it is not effective, it is not meeting the need, then we will discard it. The hon. Minister shakes his head affirmatively and I congratulate him for it.

The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) rose and acknowledged that this is what the hon. Minister had said. And I think he, too, concurred that this was just plain common sense. Now, having heard this from both of them, I just want to remind them quietly that I have listened in this House for years to their constant politicking on the government of Saskatchewan which did this very thing, because it started economic planning 20 years ago.

The government of Saskatchewan succeeded governments of the Liberal and Conservative persuasion—who talked but had no action—in diversifying the economy of Saskatchewan, particularly in the development of secondary industry. The government of Saskatchewan in 1944 said, "We are going out to develop secondary industries in Saskatchewan," and Tommy Douglas said in words that are almost a paraphrase of what the hon. Minister said, and the hon. leader of the Opposition agreed with, if they discovered that any one of these industries did not appear to be an economic one in the long-term sense, it would be discarded—and they did discard them.

What they did, Mr. Chairman, was to experiment in the way the hon. Minister is doing now. Any government that undertakes economic planning is going to do some experimenting and discover that some things will not prove to be successful, and will have to be discarded. So I hope that the hon. Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and some of his hon. colleagues behind will cease this constant reiteration of the failures of a few of the small attempts to build the secondary industries in Saskatchewan, because in the over-all these few industries represented a very small percentage of the over-all effort of the government. The rest of them were so successful that in the 20-year period a province, whose economy was almost exclusively agricultural, has been so successfully diversified through economic planning that today much over 50 per cent of it is non-agricultural and the whole basis of the economy of the province is that much stronger.

The second point, Mr. Chairman, that I wanted to touch on, is by way of concluding on the general estimate, and asking the hon. Minister a question. Undoubtedly, there is going to be a great deal of research work to be done. As my hon. colleague from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has pointed out, inevitably much of the research work for all these committees on the economic council will have to be done by his staff—either staff that is in his department, or staff that is hired specifically and attached to the economic council or any one of its committees.

I am curious to know exactly what is the range of research staff and what proportion of these estimates comes into the category of research expenditures—more particularly in the general estimate. To begin with, what could $1,000—only $1,000—be used for in the category of "in-service training"? I can quite see where a fair range of in-service training could be developed in this department, but I am a little puzzled as to what exactly it is going to be when the allotment for it is only $1,000.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, in-service training, I would say to the hon. member, is designed to have a certain amount of money in the estimates to send people who are on our staff, to courses around the province, which we think will make them more adept and more efficient at their jobs. There are courses given, from time to time, on management, book-keeping and various things, and when we find that there are these courses that we think will benefit our staff, then this is the fund from which we draw this.

If we find there are specific ones which are beyond this amount and we think that they should go to them, we go back to the Treasury board and put our points to them.

May I just correct one misstatement of fact that I made? I said that the staff of the present Department of Economics and Development was smaller than the three departments of Energy Resources, Commerce and Development last year. In fact, the new departments of Economics and Development and of Energy Resources, are smaller in complement than the departments, last year, of Economics and Commerce and Development. In short, the number of staff that I am responsible for to the House is smaller than those three departments last year.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I have three questions under vote 301, and I wonder if I could ask the hon. Minister, does he want me to ask one question at a time or ask them all together?

Mr. Macaulay: Any way he wants.

Mr. Thompson: I will ask all of them, then. My first question is still in connection with this in-service training. I wondered if the hon. Minister is going to use any of the federal departments in connection with training some of his personnel. I am thinking particularly of the immigration department, the two men going into immigration work, the overseas officers for trade and commerce; and I could go on into many other areas of the economic council, in connection with the training required.

My second question is with respect to the publication of technical, economic, financial and other reports. I noted, sir, that the hon. Minister had mentioned this fabrication gap report. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, are the facts that he has in this fabrication gap report a compilation of DBS figures in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Are what a compilation?

Mr. Thompson: The fabrication gaps, the little pamphlet that he had.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, yes, they are.

Mr. Thompson: They are? Well, might I suggest, sir, that from the trade and commerce department in Ottawa, there is a more developed pamphlet in connection with suggestions for export and import, under the industrial development branch, put out by Mr. B. R. Hayden. The reason I ask this is that I feel, first of all, in his pamphlet, in giving suggestions to industries the classifications are rather broad. The trade and commerce division in Ottawa defines the classifications more closely. I do not know if he has looked at the import studies under Mr. Hayden.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, we are in constant contact with—well he can finish his question.

Mr. Thompson: The other point to this is, if DBS figures are available, if Ottawa has a trade and commerce division, if they are compiling these statistics, it seems to me this indicates a certain overlapping with respect to the information that he is providing here.

This is the fear I have had, quite frankly, in many of the aspects that the hon. Minister has discussed under his economic council, and I admit the pamphlet is a very small item to raise, but it does indicate to me that the hon. Minister could get all this from Ottawa. He has the DBS figures, he has a trade and commerce division and he has the import studies done by a very capable man, Mr. B. R. Hayden.

My third question is in connection with special studies. I would like to ask that under special studies, would the hon. Minister define these studies? I might say, with the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), I am very confused about the position of the travel and publicity committee in the—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is under vote 302. Could we wait until then?

Mr. Thompson. Fine, then. Those are my questions.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In relation to the first question concerning this in-service training, I do not know that I can usefully say much more to the hon. member than I have. We have sent staff members to Ottawa for training in relation to immigration, we have sent people from our housing branch to extension courses in real-estate appraisal. We have sent people in our industrial development branch for extension courses in statistical methods, and so forth. I do not know what more I can really say to the hon. member than that.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, I would suggest that, in view of the hon. Minister sending these people for training in Ottawa—obviously Ottawa has experience in this work—I am just wondering whether he could not use the people in Ottawa to do the job rather than sending some of his own people to Ottawa to get the experience of Ottawa personnel.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, it is not to get experience of the Ottawa personnel, but to take training courses there, and we work in very close co-operation with the Ottawa department.

In relation to the hon. member's second question, which relates to the fabrication gap booklet, the ones I think that he is referring to are somewhat more recent than ours.

We work, again, in close co-operation with these people, but we feel, and this is the philosophy of this government, that we have some responsibilities to help ourselves. There is some suggestion that we should not have people overseas; there is some suggestion we should not be doing anything in relation to immigration; there is some suggestion I should not try to find out what the fabrication gaps are so that we can fill them. I do not know.

I am sure that the hon. members would not want this programme hobbled to the extent that I can do nothing whatsoever. I have a strong, firm and strenuous belief that we can do a very great deal in the field of trade, and some of the steps which I have proposed, I think, will help to carry this out.

One hon. member, when speaking this afternoon, made some reference to the fact that the federal government had exclusive, peculiar and some other jurisdiction in relation to trade. This is quite untrue. The British North America Act gives the federal government the power in relation to regulating trade. It has no monopoly on promoting trade, and this is what I am trying to do.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, my question to the hon. Minister was if he was informed that Mr. B. R. Hayden, who is in charge of import studies for the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, is putting out a more detailed study than the hon. Minister's book, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that his book is a duplication of what is already provided in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We started this programme in Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: I do not quite see what difference it makes who started it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We started the programme in Ontario and they are now doing it. I would point out to the hon. member that even the one which is done in Ottawa, I do not think satisfactory by our standards. To say that what comes into Canada is so many tons of leather, or so many hundreds or millions of dollars worth of leather goods—this is still not detailed sufficiently to enable us to really assist in connection with these fabrication gaps.

The federal government are putting out this book which, as I said, was undertaken after we began our publications in relation to fabrication gaps. Now, their programme we think, really in many ways, is more advanced than ours; we have to have something relating to the province of Ontario, theirs relates to all of Canada. A figure relating to all of Canada is meaningless unless it is broken down in relation to this province.

Mr. Thompson: I would just like to pursue this further because to me it indicates that there is duplication. As I understand him—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I should say also that the only one that has been put out is on the oil industry; does the hon. member understand that?

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry. I am looking at the "possible Canadian export opportunities"—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: That was put out by the industrial development branch.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could the hon. member look at the subject matter involved in it?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I see it has a variety of some agricultural food products throughout its—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It has not the detail that ours has in it.

But the hon. member's question was: are we aware of it? My answer is yes.

Mr. Thompson: I am talking about the one that the hon. Minister is suggesting—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am talking about Mr. Hayden's study, or his fabrication booklet. My understanding is that he has only put out one and it is in relation to oil equipment.

Mr. Thompson: I would suggest to the hon. Minister that there is more in Hayden's import study. The other point I would suggest—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, would the hon. member not only suggest to me, would he name them?

Mr. Thompson: I will get the names for the hon. Minister. They are import studies.

The other point is that I have heard criticisms about the hon. Minister's own studies. I have just mentioned, "possible Canadian export opportunities," in this small pamphlet. It is not as useful for the very reason that he is suggesting, that it is too broad in the coverage suggesting export opportunities. Industries want this broken down more.

It is all very well to say a well driller is needed but it should be more defined. I would like to make that as a recommendation, even though I do think there is still duplication in this.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think when the hon. member looks at the Hayden study he will find that it is not as he has said. It may be that this is something new that has been put out in the last few days, because the only one of which I know is the one that deals with oil equipment and it has a very limited application as far as we are concerned. It was the only one that was available at the time the conference was held here in Toronto some several months ago.

As far as the hon. member's criticism of possible export opportunities being too general is concerned, we acknowledge that this is a problem. This was sort of a pioneer project and we anticipate that, like everything else in life, there is room for improvement.

Mr. Thompson: May I have the answer to my third question, about what the special studies are?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: When we come to vote 302.

Mr. Thompson: No, I am sorry; it is on 301.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, yes! We have been carrying on for some time, as the hon. member knows, studies in relation to portable pensions. This has been a very time-consuming project from the department's point of view, as well as a very large and important one. We are also making a submission, which we are now preparing, to the Royal commission on banking and finance, and we will be submitting one in conjunction with the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) to the Royal commission on health.

There are a number of other studies in this connection; we have a great number. We are doing one on the European common market at the moment, and I have a number of others here, some of which we are working on now and are incomplete and which I have left over in the department; these generally are the kind of studies that we do.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask, just to get clarification on one of the subjects, what approach is taken to it? The hon. Minister mentioned he is doing a study on the European common market.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The study in relation to the European common market is going to be in two parts. Some of the studies that we have underway now, relate to the milk industry and a great many different aspects of our economy.

In relation to the European common market, we want to find out first of all what industry, what kind of imports and exports, are going to be affected by the organization of the European common market. Then second, what influence will these have upon the Ontario economy.

We expect that this will be finished in several months. It is a very advanced study, and I think will prove to be a very important one.

Mr. Thompson: Surely, such studies are being done at the federal level; or is hon. Mr. Fleming's a case of gloom and the hon. Minister's of optimism because he is not doing such studies?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We perhaps have an entirely different outlook, as was pointed out in the Globe and Mail this morning. In the event, I would simply say that I have heard that people have seen both studies and have—I will limit my comment to this—some considerable admiration for the one that we are conducting.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, there is another item I would like to raise which I think probably comes under vote 301. I have here a letter dated March 7 from the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association signed by its president and general manager, Vice-Admiral E. R. Mainguy.

I assume that this same letter has gone to the hon. Minister and other hon. members of the House; I am quite sure that Admiral Mainguy would not write to me exclusively. I will, therefore, not undertake to read it; I will content myself merely with saying that the letter presents an argument, in my opinion a very cogent argument, in favour of a toll-free Welland ship canal.

The former hon. Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Frost) expressed some views on this subject some years ago. I think it is a very important subject. I personally favour elimination of tolls on the Welland ship canal as part of an overall transportation policy. One of Canada's major disadvantages, and one that it has always had, is the high and inflexible cost created by transportation over long distances. I would say anything that can be done to reduce those costs would be desirable.

The reason I raise the matter is that I would like to know, if it is possible to find out, if the current administration which has taken over recently has any position on this matter. If so, would they care to state what it is and what they hope to do to persuade others of their point of view on that subject?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I can most simply answer the hon. member by saying that the point of view of the present administration in no detail differs from the point of view of the former one. As far as what we are doing is concerned, we have done a study on this ourselves and we are in touch, whenever it seems it would be most worthwhile, with the federal authorities to put our position to them. I do not think I can say much more than that.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister's running mate out there in Broadview-Riverdale used to be the Minister of Transport, and is now Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees). Does the hon. Minister have no more influence with him on this matter than these other associations? Is there no way that this government might be able to bring some real pressure to bear on the federal government to reconsider its position on this very important matter?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This may be the way business is done elsewhere, in other provinces, but I would point out to the hon. member that in this case the toll was established by virtue of a Canada-USA agreement and regardless of the closeness of friendship between myself and my running mate, it is not strong enough to affect that matter.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if any publications had been made as a result of the studies of The Department of Economics.

I understand that it is the responsibility of the department to analyze and make projections with respect to the trends in provincial and municipal taxation. What is the picture with respect to the trends for the future? Has the department made any projections in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: These are matters which the hon. Minister concerned should deal with under the heading of the budget, they have nothing to do with me in relation to this. My people provide the staff to do the research, the conclusions are drawn by The Department of the Treasury.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I think this is somewhat confusing, because I have in front of me a publication which was printed, as a matter of fact I believe the deputy minister was responsible for it, and it says that one of the important functions of the department is the carrying out of analyses and studies and it goes on to explain what these are. Now surely if these studies are being made by the department and if we are being asked to vote money at this time, it would be in order to ask the results of those studies or at least to have the conclusions which were drawn from those studies.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Whatever results there are to studies are in the report in front of the hon. member. As far as what action is taken upon them, this is the general service department which provides information as a result of research to a number of departments and this is acted on by the department concerned.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, it seems that I will not get an answer on this. I would point out to the hon. Minister that there is no other opportunity for hon. members on this side to find out just what is being determined from these matters. This is a matter which does involve the expenditure of public funds, and we are being asked to vote the money for the staff which makes these studies and which come to these conclusions. Surely it is not unreasonable if the hon. members are going to be asked to vote the funds that they be informed as to just where they are going. I think it is a matter of extreme importance to all hon. members of this House to know just what projection has been made and what the possible effects are likely to be, say, three, five or 10 years hence. And since the municipalities do enter into this, I think it is of extreme importance. I wonder if the hon. Minister would consider publishing these projections.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, when I said we have not made projections, it is difficult to publish them.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I point out to the hon. Minister that what he is telling me is in direct conflict with the report which was issued to all hon. members of this House and which I have in front of me.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, then, what does the hon. member want?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: And this says that projections are made of provincial and municipal taxation, ordinary and capital expenditures, and debt. Now the hon. Minister comes and tells us that no projections are made. It is difficult to understand. As I have pointed out other times in this House, the one source of information which is available to hon. members on this side are the reports that are issued by the government itself; and when the hon. Minister comes and contradicts those statements it is difficult to come to any conclusion as to whether the estimates are or are not in order.

If this is not the proper place to place this question, I shall be pleased to bring it up under the appropriate section. It seems to me that the development of the province which comes under these estimates is directly related to the mobility and the availability of labour. I endeavoured to raise the question under The Department of Labour last year and was told that this was not a matter which came within that department. It would seem to me then that it does come within this department.

I should like to know what studies have been made, if any, with respect to the effect of automation upon the labour force. I would like to know whether or not any projections have been made as to the effect of automation over the next few years. And I should like to know whether or not the development of the province will be affected by the training plans which are now in effect, and how they apply to this entire labour situation. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us anything in respect to that problem.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As far as the studies in relation to automation are concerned, I made a statement in relation to that yesterday. As far as the specific individual study on automation and mobility of labour in the past are concerned, this mobility of labour and the problems involved in automation are related of course in many of the specific studies, one of which I had delivered to hon. members yesterday. So in short, the problem of automation forms a part of every specific individual study that we have made, but as for studying automation individually and a specific study, this has not been undertaken. We are in the process of undertaking it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, at the risk of the hon. Minister advising me that I was not listening, would he repeat the general context of the statement he made on automation that he referred to?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I indicated to the House yesterday that a committee was being established under the economic council to consider the problems involved in retraining and assessing what we were doing, to dealing with automation, and a number of the labour problems associated with it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: So the statement yesterday was in relation to the future rather than to the past?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, that is right, in relation to the present.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, this is what I was endeavouring to find out; it would seem to me that it would be very important that we know to what extent and to what percentage the present labour force will be displaced by automation in, say, three or five years. I think we would be interested to know at what rate automation is affecting and is displacing our labour force. I should also like to ask the hon. Minister whether or not his department is recommending any tax exemptions in respect to the development of secondary industry.

I know that the income tax is a federal matter, but it seems to me that the province does impose a considerable corporation tax. Does the hon. Minister feel that tax incentives are a proper method of developing secondary industry? Is his department recommending any such moves to the appropriate department of government?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I ask the hon. member if he was here yesterday?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I most certainly was, Mr. Chairman, and I do not think it is appropriate; the hon. Minister told us yesterday that these things were being referred to an economic council. Now I am not asking him what the economic council is recommending, he is the man who is charged with the responsibility, I am asking if The Department of Economics has made any recommendations. There is a difference.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if the hon. member can see the difference, I cannot.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. Minister, there is a distinct difference. The economic council is an advisory council, the hon. Minister of Economics and his department is a department that is here to make decisions and make recommendations. It seems to me that what the hon. Minister has really told us is that they have not really done anything, and they are going to look for leadership from the economic council rather than to give that leadership from the government, from where it rightfully should come.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is interesting to note that this is one of the specific things that Mr. Pearson said he would refer to the Economic Council of Canada, which he also said would be one of the first things he would do if he took power in Ottawa. He said this in his speech of February 20, 1962.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, first of all, Mr. Pearson is running for Prime Minister of Canada, and we are concerned with the rights of the people who live in this province. There is quite a difference. And to try to make this thing into a political hassle is, in my opinion, wrong. I asked the hon. Minister what was forthcoming from his department and I suggest that he has taken it completely out of context because he does not know the answers.

Now, one further question I should like to ask is with respect to the matter which was brought up last year. I see a considerable sum has been expended in public account with respect to the matter of the port at Moosonee. Is this the proper place to raise this question?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, this is not the proper place.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Would the hon. Minister tell me under what vote I am to raise it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I mentioned yesterday where we would deal with it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I wonder, sir, if you would advise me where I might raise the question of the port at Moosonee. Apparently you did not hear the hon. Minister either.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Under the Ontario Northland Railway, immediately following the St. Lawrence Development Commission.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the item of special studies. I was wondering if the hon. Minister had considered the opportunity for Canadian firms overseas, and I am not thinking only of Great Britain or Europe. This is from the point of view of foreign construction. I am thinking of this from the point of view of study. I have this paper before me, the Daily Commercial News and Building Record, and I am looking at immense opportunities for construction firms and others to tender on foreign investments from Morocco for this $300 million opportunity in building a tunnel. Is this an area in which the hon. Minister has developed an interest?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, this is an area in which the Minister has developed an interest.

Mr. Thompson: Would he tell us how he is going to develop this?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This, like every other job opportunity, we attempt to evaluate and to make known to the various parts of our economy in our province who we think may be possibly able to take part in such development; this is all we can do.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, the only book I got was Fabrication Gaps and I am wondering, for example, these are put out by private enterprise — the Daily Commercial News and Building Record. I have another—the International Construction Reporter—and I am wondering what kind of material the hon. Minister puts out to private industry to inform them of the opportunities.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We put out a number of booklets, some of which I delivered to hon. members yesterday. We have, however, something that we think is more effective. We have a number of people on our staff whose responsibility is to try to keep track of some of the foreign opportunities. They are in constant circulation around the province, calling on both municipalities and industries, to keep them acquainted with these things. Our purpose is to assist, not to replace, private industry.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, in item No. 7 there is an amount for advertising. Does this include the total amount for all the advertising that The Department of Economics and Development will carry out? I am wondering. I notice in the release that was issued under the name of the hon. Prime Minister of this province, that the committee for tourist industry will work to find ways to attract more foreign tourists to Ontario and encourage Ontario vacationers to holiday in their own province. Now if that committee recommends certain ways to attract, will the hon. Minister take the money out of this advertising budget for them?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This advertising for the tourist industry itself is handled by the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart). This advertising account relates to advertising exhibits and conferences, and there are two branches which have some participation in this amount; one is the housing branch and the other is the industrial development branch.

Mr. Troy: Any information from this committee on the tourist industry will be channeled through the hon. Minister's department to The Department of Travel and Publicity. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It may be that the committee will make a number of recommendations; these recommendations will then be studied by the Cabinet and, if they are to be acted upon, any that relate to the tourist industry will, of course, go to the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity for action.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire on the fourth item in 301—postage. What is the explanation?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The amount that was spent last year by The Department of Economics itself was $4,000, and the amount spent by The Department of Commerce and Development was $9,000, making a total of $13,000, and in view of the stepped-up programme we have this year, relating to industrial development, the amount we are asking for this year is $14,000; this is for the postage of the department as a whole.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The real basis of my inquiry is: I thought all the department's postage, its entire postage account, would be free account. The hon. Minister can mail things out here franked, as such, can he not?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Wintermeyer: He does. His department?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. No.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, in the various departments, is the postage handled differently? Would the hon. Minister explain why this department is charged with postage? We noted under The Department of Travel and Publicity that there was no charge and we were told that this came out of The Department of the Provincial Secretary.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister delivers things personally.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: All I can say is that the amount of money that we had to spend on postage last year for the two departments was $13,000, this year we are asking for $14,000 and this, I think, is perhaps because our buildings are away from the central office here. I would say that postage in the post office downstairs comes under the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko).

An hon. member: Could the hon. Minister not deliver a lot of these things on his way home?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do, as a matter of fact, on the way down.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Chairman, under vote 301, I think the hon. Minister mentioned the fact that there are less people employed now in the combined offices of the department than there were when they were separate. I rather thought that he actually implied some form of criticism against the former hon. Minister, now the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Kingston (Mr. Nickle).

I think we ought to have the opportunity, when the hon. Minister is back in the House, of getting an explanation from him as to why he was overstaffed or why the present hon. Minister might be understaffed. I just wanted to mention that fact; it would be very interesting to have him explain this point.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I might just answer. The difference is not great, I acknowledge, but it is down instead of a trend upwards, and one of the reasons, of course, is obvious. Where you have three active departments you are bound to have, in order to keep properly advised, some form of a library. Therefore each department would have its own librarian; each department under its main office would have its own accountant in charge of paying its staff and keeping charge of its money. This permits the reduction of staff. And so the story goes; I do not know how many more were down but I think about 10.

Mr. Reaume: Fine.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As I said before, we took out of the department the branch relating to publicity and public relations, and this took a number out.

Mr. Reaume: I was just wondering if the hon. Minister would mind when we have the chance and the hon. Minister without Portfolio is here in the House, if I were to ask him a question for the purpose of finding out whether or not his story and yours jibe.

Mr. Troy: Has the hon. Minister still got the emergency measures organization in his department?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No.

Mr. Troy: Well, where did they go?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The Attorney-General's Department.

Mr. Troy: Well, I presume, then, it is not such a complete change.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, the point is: We have added another whole department to it; this is the point.

Vote 301 agreed to.

On vote 302:

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, on vote 302, I recall that when the hon. Minister presented the purpose of the Ontario Economic Council, it was to assimilate all phases of economic development and bring together labour, management, agriculture and government.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is that under the proper vote?

Mr. Belanger: Which vote are we on?

Mr. Troy: 301.

Mr. Belanger: 302; am I not correct?

An hon. member: Did we carry vote 301? We did not hear it.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 302.

Mr. Belanger: Well, under this, I would like to speak on the tenth point or plank, which is to increase industrial incentive. I am wondering what co-operation this government has with its brothers in Ottawa, because some 18 months ago or more, quite a report was presented to the Canadian government to which the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) referred the other day, speaking in the budget debate. I am referring to the Bladen report. We have there a report which is quite intensive. There was quite a representation made by the automobile industry and I know that if the recommendations were implemented by the government that this would mean some $400 million to this country.

Now, the automobile industry is installed chiefly in the province of Ontario. I am wondering why this government is not lending support to this report and asking the federal government to implement the recommendations of this report. Definitely, we have something that would help the automobile industry and other industries indirectly in the province. I would like to know from the hon. Minister if he is trying to do everything to increase industries in the province? In the Bladen report the machinery is all set up right there. Now all that has to be done is to get together and do something about this report. I am asking the hon. Minister: what has he done about it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I would point out to the hon. member—and his question is quite proper—that firstly, Professor Bladen is a member of the economic council, I am sure the hon. member is aware of that.

Secondly, the council might study through one of its committees, the various incentives which are possible in relation to encouraging the reduction of, for example, the number of foreign parts in a Canadian-assembled or manufactured vehicle or other piece of equipment. And this is in line with the second programme to which I made reference, namely, in effect, closing the gap, as I have referred to it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on vote 302, I would like to make a few remarks. I feel, sir, that what the hon. Minister has suggested with his 20 points are very worthwhile suggestions for Ontario, but I do have some concern that he may still be overlapping with the federal department. And my concern increased in view of the few questions I asked this afternoon. The hon. Minister has indicated, to me anyway, he might correct me if I am wrong, that he was dissatisfied with the study under Mr. Fleming's department in Ottawa in connection—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I said no such thing; do not torture it out of shape.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry! Let me put it this way then: he said his study of the European common market was a fairly good one and he did not want to comment on the other.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I did not say that either.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask the hon. Minister, then, what he did say?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I said that the study being carried on in our department has been spoken of in very glowing or enthusiastic terms by people who have seen both studies.

Mr. Thompson: Could I put it this way? It seems to me the hon. Minister is in a little bit of a dilemma. If the federal study was good, there really would not be much need for the hon. Minister to do a study.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is quite wrong, and I explained why.

Mr. Thompson: I did not get the hon. Minister's explanation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Theirs is done on a national basis. It does include Ontario, but it naturally does not show how much of this is by provinces. This does not do much for us. What we want to know, for instance, is, of all the leather goods coming into Ontario: how much there is and whether it is in shoes, handbags or purses or whatever it may be.

Now it does not help us to know how much there is coming into all of Canada, because there may be none of it, for example, coming into Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: Is the hon. Minister suggesting to me that The Department of Trade and Commerce does not break it down according to provinces?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The Department of Trade and Commerce study does not show this, as I understand it.

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. Minister not envisage the possibility that an industry located in Ontario could sell elsewhere in Canada, that exports into any part of Canada could create an opportunity for industry within Ontario?

Mr. Thompson: I would like to follow up here: has the hon. Minister ever asked the department in Ottawa to give him those facts, rather than create another department to do it himself?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Our department is in constant touch with these people.

Mr. Thompson: That is not the question. I am asking: did the hon. Minister ever ask the department in Ottawa when it was doing this study to specify the facts on Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: And they would not do this?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, that is not correct. This is an immense subject and I do not think the hon. member appreciates it, with great respect—

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate the fact of the cost of this, and I think the taxpayers of Ontario should not be charged twice.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There is no question of people being charged twice. This is a study which every province, I am confident, will carry on related to their own specific needs and we are doing this in this province. Interestingly enough, if I had not had it underway, the hon. member would have been standing up and accusing me of not being interested in the common market, and asking why were we not doing something.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate the hon. Minister knows what I would say, some people say I do not even know myself.

I have been interested in the economic council from the point of view of the personnel that are going to be used. If I could, I would go through each area, and perhaps the hon. Minister would be good enough to answer them for me.

Yes, I am interested in the personnel and where the hon. Minister is going to get this personnel. I am interested in the priority of the studies. There are 20 points. Which are going to be given particular priority at this time? I realize that I cannot ask—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They have all started.

Mr. Thompson: And there is no emphasis on one over the other?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They are all being done by different groups who are qualified in that particular field.

Mr. Thompson: Might I ask about the personnel, then, of the—I do not want to go through the whole personnel—but could the hon. Minister give me the personnel on the retraining study? There are so many, and such a wide field, that I could guess almost any of them.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I am not able to tell the hon. member.

I should, I think, point out to the hon. member so that he will understand, the Ontario Economic Council was established in the first place by the government requesting certain organizations to send certain nominees to the council. They were not appointed by the government; they are not government appointees, in short, in that sense. They are actually named by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, but the various organizations are the ones responsible for naming these people.

The desire of the government is, while not being bound to accept their recommendations, at the same time not to unduly interfere in their operations. As far as the chairman of the council advising me who is on these committees and what their names are, I am unable to tell the hon. member. However, I am sure, if he is interested in knowing the names of the personnel on these various committees, I would be happy to get them. They are still recruiting, but they have not begun their studies.

Mr. Thompson: Thanks.

I was interested as well in some aspects that have been raised about the economic council. I wondered, for example, when the hon. Minister talked about the Ontario development fund which is going to help industry, whether at this time the hon. Minister could elaborate. I feel frankly that the approach to helping industry to settle in a municipality might be to help the municipality with its social capital.

I raise this question: if the government is going to help particular industries, does the hon. Minister not see a political danger in that he has to choose in placing one industry over another? As I understand it, the hon. Minister is going to have discretion in placing the industry.

I can see some aspects that would make this very worthwhile, for example, in areas where there is excess labour. Of course, today in Ontario this covers a great deal of ground, but there may be a time when excess labour exists only in particular areas.

I have another question from the hon. Minister's speech—unfortunately I have not had a chance to read it, I just had to make notes as he was speaking—but I had the impression that the government would help in allocating industry and I do not know if this is a philosophy of the government. If it is the hon. Minister's, I am wondering how he would decide between, say, Oshawa and Ottawa. Has he got some rules for encouraging an industry to settle in one particular place?

I raise the question about the hon. Minister's tax incentives to industry. I feel that because Ontario gets 10 per cent of the 50 per cent corporation tax, that he is going to have to have a great deal of co-operation from the federal government in connection with this being really worthwhile. I had sensed that perhaps there is not much co-operation between the federal department and the hon. Minister's own department at this time; I make just the small point of his pamphlet. I thought perhaps he was not aware of the detail of what is being done by the trade and commerce division in Ottawa; but that is a very small detail in comparison with more major issues in connection with his department.

Certainly everything that can be done to encourage trade in the world market should be encouraged, but I just wonder whether these trade junkets overseas have been so profitable. I notice the figures on exports in connection with hon. Mr. Hees' overseas junket and I feel the real necessity to encourage manufacturers in Canada to tie up with requirements in some overseas market, is to suggest that manufacturers in Canada meet people overseas themselves, personally. I can see, however, that a liaison could be developed. But I would hope this is not going to be a junket of only bright economists going over there without liaison at a level closer to the producers.

I raise just another question: the hon. Minister is going to encourage certain industries—I think he has said "a co-operative manufacturing and export basis", I do not know if I am using his terms—in order that these industries can be helped in developing foreign markets. I just raise this question, that there are dangers if the government selects these co-operative groups of manufacturers, I think there are dangers again with respect to the anti-combine laws.

I certainly raise a question in connection with the immigration policy. I think that it really ties in again with what the federal government has been saying, they want to get skilled immigrants to come here, special immigrants, in order to create work. I think the hon. Minister has to look at the situation in Canada because often one can get doctors or nurses. I know he is talking more in terms of technical people, but there is going to be a great deal to discourage them from coming here. Apart from the prosperity that is being enjoyed in western Europe, there are barriers when they arrive here, placed by associations. I think there will need to be a lot of liaison between the professional associations so that they will accept the influx of trained and skilled people.

I have raised a number of questions. One more, and I do this to a large extent as a layman, is the hon. Minister's research centre. I understand it is going to be a $19 million research institute near Brampton. I would suggest, sir, that in many ways research ideas, and ideas can be transported.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Perhaps the hon. member could discuss that under the Ontario Research Foundation, which is on another vote.

Mr. Thompson: Would that come under the Ontario Research Foundation? I wonder if I could have answers to those?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, they were really rhetorical questions. The hon. member asked me whether we were co-operating with the federal government or could we co-operate in view of the fact we had a 10 per cent corporation tax; I thought that the hon. member would like to know it is not 10 per cent in this province.

Mr. Thompson: Ten per cent of the 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, it is not 10 of the 50.

Mr. Thompson: What is it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is 11.

Mr. Thompson: Eleven; I am sorry. Well, it is a small amount.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, it is not a small amount; it is a very large amount.

Mr. Thompson: In the influence on industry?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, a very large influence on industry, the one per cent.

As for how the co-operation between the provincial government and the federal government worked out, I have every confidence that if the government decides that this is a field in which the government should advance, we will have no difficulty in working this out with the government in Ottawa. In any event, the incentives in relation to the provincial corporation tax can be given by way of a rebate without any working out of any kind.

As far as the junkets of people going overseas are concerned, they are not junkets. I anticipate they will likely pay their own way there. They will be drawn from industry that has specific interests in the overseas market and they will be experts in this field. This is why they will be picked.

As for the $19 million research centre, it is $9 million; but we can deal with that under the Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. Thompson: And immigration?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As far as immigration is concerned, we have had an immigration office in Ontario House since 1943.

Mr. Thompson: I know that the hon. Minister has had an immigration office in Ontario House since 1943.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We shall discuss that under Ontario House, shall we? There is a place specifically for that.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in some comments that the hon. Minister made in answer to questions by the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson). They were actually comments made along the way, but I would like to pursue the particular point a little further.

He stated, I think, with specific regard to the sub-committees or committees established under the economic council, that in effect—let me put it this way—the appointments were made by groups whom he wanted to have represented on these sub-committees, that certainly the government reserved its authority to make the appointments, but essentially it was interested in appointing people who were named by the groups whose opinions he wanted presented.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No; I did not say that at all.

Mr. Bryden: If I misunderstood him, then perhaps he would correct me.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I asked the various organizations in this province to name someone, and those persons were all, in every case, appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I perhaps made a wrong inference which was purely unintentional. That was the conclusion I drew, and I will withdraw that suggestion if it was a wrong conclusion.

At any rate, in actual practice, as far as sub-committees are concerned, he asked groups he considered appropriate to name people for the committees and in all cases he appointed them.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is quite incorrect, and in addition I did not say that. I pointed out that the sub-committees were under the complete control of the council and the appointments are made by the council, not by me. I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Bryden: Well then, during the hon. Minister's reference to this particular matter he stated that appointments were made by order-in-council. Was he referring to the members of the council?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, sir; yes.

Mr. Bryden: Then was the procedure that the hon. Minister followed to ask various organizations for nominees and, in actual fact, appoint everyone who was suggested?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I really did not ask them to name nominees. I asked them to name someone to the council. In short, I did not accept any choice. I would accept whoever was named. This is a different thing than saying: "Would you name someone whom you would like to have as an appointee," and then having a right to turn them down. I made it quite clear to these organizations that whoever they named, whether they were acceptable to me or not, they would be on the council.

Mr. Bryden: Well, in that regard the hon. Minister went a little further than I had thought; and I may say that his approach is refreshingly different from that of the government at Ottawa, which apparently takes the position that it does not want to hear advice from anybody except Tories. There is a real danger that that government will become even further removed than it is now from the sentiments of various important groups in this country, and I think it should be acquainted with the views of those people.

I would agree with what appears to me to be the underlying philosophy of the hon. Minister in this matter. I hope I do not improperly impute anything to him, but it would appear his underlying philosophy is that when he wants the views of various groups, the best way to ensure himself that he will have them is to listen to people whom those groups themselves name, and in whom they have confidence. I personally would not go to the extent of saying that even with an advisory body the government should consider itself committed to accept anyone whom a participating body might name. I certainly think, however, it should satisfy itself that anybody appointed has the confidence of the body concerned, and this is certainly an important and refreshing departure from the policy of the federal government. In pursuit of this matter, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he could tell me which groups named the various members of the council.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I will be very happy to. Did the hon. member not receive a copy of this red booklet which I have here?

Mr. Bryden: I have received a copy, Mr. Chairman. I will confess that, so far, I have only had a chance to—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The industrial members will be requested one each from the Ontario division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade. Nominations of the labour members will be requested one each from the Ontario Federation of Labour and the provincial building and construction trade. The third labour representative will be selected from northern Ontario, preferably from a union operating in a resource industry.

In the case of agriculture, the Farmers' Union will be asked to name one nominee and the Federation of Agriculture the other two. The two government representatives will be nominated by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council; they are Mr. Gathercole, the Deputy Minister, and Mr. Clarkson, the assistant Deputy Minister. In addition to that, subsequent to preparing this, we felt it was wise to have someone from the universities, and we appointed Professor Bladen. We felt it was important to have someone from the Export Association and we asked them to name someone, and it is Mr. Holbrook, who is the president of the Algoma Steel Company in Sault Ste. Marie. We felt it was desirable to have someone from the field of research and we asked the Ontario Research Foundation to name someone and they named Dr. Mysner the director. The chairman, Mr. Randall, was selected by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. He is the president of General Steel Works.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister's answer indicates what I would consider to be a quite satisfactory approach except for the representation of the labour movement on the council. I want, first of all, to make it clear that I am not in any way casting any reflections on any member of this council; I am rather trying to approach the matter from the point of view of principle, without reference to the individuals concerned, for all of whom I have the very highest regard. But as far as I can see, the Ontario Federation of Labour, which represents practically the entire labour movement of this province—the only exceptions being a few Communist unions and one or two break-away unions from the general labour body—but certainly the federation represents the overwhelming majority of the workers of this province—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The manufacturers' association represents the overwhelming group of manufacturers. Nevertheless, we asked the chamber of commerce and the board of trade, and all these people, as far as I know, are members of the Ontario federation.

Mr. Bryden: I would still repeat that the Ontario Federation of Labour is the chosen spokesman of the overwhelming majority of organized workers in this province, and yet, as far as I can see, the Ontario Federation of Labour was asked to name only one person. Now, in the field of agriculture, the hon. Minister, and I think quite rightly, had farm organizations name three; one of the organizations named two, and the other named one. In the labour field, the chosen spokesman of practically all the organized workers was asked to name only one. Another one was named by a smaller group within the Ontario Federation of Labour. I do not think the hon. Minister can indicate a parallel for that sort of procedure in the other appointments, where a group within a larger group was specifically asked to make an appointment.

As far as I could make out from what he said, the third labour member—and again I am now not talking personally, because I think he is a very fine man doing very fine work—was simply an appointee of the government, and the labour movement was not consulted at all.

The hon. Minister said that he wanted a labour representative from the northern part of the province, and particularly one in the resource industries; I think there is a lot to be said for that, but the Ontario Federation of Labour includes within it all the unions, outside of one Communist union, which operate in that area. It is strange to me that, in this one case, the government makes an exception, departs from what the hon. Minister says is the announced policy, and simply makes the appointment itself. If I am wrong in drawing that inference from what he said, I would certainly like to be corrected; but that appears to be what he said and I think it is rather unfortunate that he asked the Ontario Federation of Labour for only one nominee in view of the fact that it represents also the other areas from which he said he wanted representation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member, that, first of all, I discussed this matter with Mr. Archer, who is the president of the Federation of Labour of Ontario and who is the member also of the council. One's plans in all of these things are relatively fluid, and I think if the hon. member would be patient enough to realize the amount of work that has gone into the organization of these departments, and the number of things that we have established in this time, I would frankly say that maybe some of the decisions we made in relation to the council could be improved. This is quite possible.

It may be that Mr. Gillis is the northern representative. I frankly wanted to have somebody who I felt seemed to symbolize the highest ideals of the labour movement for northern Ontario, and I felt that Mr. Gillis was a good man for this. On the other hand, it may be possible that, in due course, we can make some other arrangements. Nothing is hard and fast on this and I told Mr. Randall, who is the chairman, that if he wanted to make additional adjustments as to further personnel that this would be so. My own personal relationships with Mr. Archer, I believe, are of the highest order, and I am hopeful that Mr. Archer has faith in me, that I am trying to do what I see with my political philosophy, as the right thing from our province's point of view. Mr. Archer at no time said to me that he objected to this. As far as the third representative—

Mr. Bryden: I am not suggesting Mr. Archer does object—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As far as the third representative is concerned that is the member of the construction trades. Now they are members of the federation, and when Mr. Archer and I discussed this, some weeks before, I pointed out to him that no matter how we handled these appointments to this council, I was determined that we should have somebody—it did not matter to me who he was, so long as he, as you say, was accepted by and had the confidence of the construction trades; because I think the hon. member will agree that this is an area which has given very great concern to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), and to this Legislature and to our labour legislation as a whole. I felt that if we had somebody from this group on the council, it would be a good thing. I frankly had never met the gentleman before. I never consulted the Cabinet as to what they thought, or if they knew the man at all. I sent a letter out and I told the Federation of Labour that I was doing this. I sent a letter to the trades council and asked them if they would name a representative.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, may I invite the hon. Minister to pronounce his name "Gillis. G-i-l-l-i-s, Gillis." I want to say, as a matter of record, that I did not say, nor did I mean to imply in any way, that the matter of trade and commerce and cultivation of foreign trade was an exclusive matter of federal jurisdiction—in the sense that a citizen of Ontario would hale the hon. Minister in the court on a constitutional question and seek to get an injunction to close down his trade offices abroad. I said this, and I repeat for the record, that The Department of Trade and Commerce has had the responsibility, as a matter of custom and practice under The British North America Act, for the cultivation of foreign trade, and each of our legations and embassies abroad is always at a commercial and trade attaché and to the extent that the hon. Minister is now going to go abroad—or send his people abroad—to sell bacon, apples and cheese; then it is either on the one hand empire building on his part, or on the other hand it is the failure of the federal government to carry out their responsibilities; one of the two.

Now next year when we come to his estimates we will assess the quantity—the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and I will assess them—the quantity of bacon, apples, cheese, tomato juice and everything else that he has sold—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And bologna!

Mr. Sopha: —and bologna! We make a lot of it anyway.

Now, since I had so much success in speaking to the hon. Minister earlier in French, if I may take as the text and theme of my remarks another French phrase and that is the historic one of Voltaire—I think I am right in saying it is Voltaire's—when he said—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Who is the hon. member looking at for confirmation, the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume)?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume). He said: "Plus ça change; plus c'est la même chose."

And for those of our brethren here who do not understand this, that means: "The more a thing changes, the more it remains the same."

Now some things do change. I decry and deplore the fact, after listening to my hon. friend from York South (Mr. MacDonald) that nowadays the socialist has disappeared from the scene. There are no more socialists, they are all Galbraithians. And the public thinks that too; they have disappeared and they ought to disappear. They get 17 per cent of the votes. I wish we had a bearded socialist around.

I would say to my very esteemed, and the person I regard very highly, my almost beloved hon. colleague from Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson), I would say to him that in order to understand this $150,000 for the economic council, that one must look at it in the historical perspective. The economic council was part and parcel of the new image of September and October. He said, the hon. Minister as reported in the newspaper, the Toronto Globe and Mail on October 17, he said:

The Ontario Progressive Conservative Party must adopt a dynamic programme at its next convention to replace the image of Premier Leslie Frost, Energy Resources Minister Robert Macaulay said last night.

And this is part of the new image!

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): The hon. member is screamingly funny, but why do we not get on with the work?

Mr. Sopha: Well, I have not time to stop. One must understand when I say to my hon. colleague from Dovercourt, one must understand in the light of this utterance, these undying words:

There is no substitute for hard work. I know that many people think that I am overly ambitious. Frankly, I do not understand this. I think that any man without ambition is a vegetable.

Now I will leave hon. members to guess who said that!

I want to make these two points about the economic council. As I said earlier, and I think just at the point the hon. Minister was constrained to keep me within the four corners of the votes, I said that this had become a repository of problems; that already in the few short weeks that this thing has been in existence, we have heard time and time again, when we raised a question, that the problem will be referred to the economic council for study and there will be a report. Now, somebody very aptly said in this House, and it bears repeating, that the responsibility for policy and the responsibility for solving problems cannot be divested from the two front rows of the Treasury benches over there and shouldered or sloughed onto some body which is not responsible directly to the electorate of the people of Ontario. Responsibility must remain where constitutionally it is endowed, and that is on the Executive Council. That is one point.

The other aspect of the economic council is that I say; and perhaps I am able to say it more than a great many people in this House that would like to say it, including the hon. Minister of Mines; and that is: the purview of the economic council under the hegemony of the leadership will mean that no department of the government will be safe from its inspection. It will be within the four corners of every department, conducting its reports and surveys.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is the hon. member against that?

Mr. Sopha: I am making my observations and submissions in respect of it.

Mr. MacDonald: They are like the Liberals, always for and against it.

Mr. Sopha: I am trying to lay down some very salutary considerations in respect of its operation, which I hope will be a guide to the hon. Minister in its operation.

Now already we see that the economic council, or the hon. Minister, is within The Department of Agriculture. We have heard about that one. He is now going to take over part of the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) especially insofar as it means the peddling and sale and trafficking in the produce of the agricultural industry of this province.

Now the other thing I want to observe and report. Again I ask my hon. friend from Dovercourt to view these things in the light of history. Many hon. members of the House may recall that just at the time of the leadership convention last October, very suddenly and without any previous notice at all the former Prime Minister of this province announced that he had founded an organization which, I think, he called the economic advisory committee. As far as the hon. Minister was concerned, when he heard of the hon. Prime Minister's announcement about the economic advisory committee he told an audience in Pembroke on October 20, under this heading:

MACAULAY SAYS HE WAS CONFOUNDED BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL ANNOUNCEMENT

And later on it reports him this way:

He told his audience he was confounded to read of Mr. Frost's economic committee but was pleased to learn that his thinking agrees with that of the Prime Minister.

I took the trouble to look up the word "confounded"; and the word "confounded" according to the Oxford Dictionary means "to confuse, perplex or dismay". Now not only insofar as—take that definition "dismay." I venture to say he was not the only one dismayed, because the former hon. Prime Minister of this province even went so far as to appoint the personnel to this economic advisory committee, and we have not heard a word to this date from the hon. Minister about what has happened to this group; a group of very respectable citizens.

I invite my hon. colleagues, at least on this side of the House, to harken to the names of some of the persons to whom the former hon. Prime Minister of the province, or whom the former hon. Prime Minister of the province appointed to this advisory committee. They included: Mr. O. D. Vaughan, a former vice-chairman of the T. Eaton Company; Mr. W. O. Twaits, who I believe is president and general manager of Imperial Oil; Mr. Russell Harvey—as my hon. friends to the left will be able to recognize, he is of the labour movement, I believe; Mr. Rhys Sale of Ford Motor Company; M. W. McCutcheon of Argus Corporation completes the list of those whom I know.

There has been no announcement from the government, least of all from the hon. gentlemen about what has happened to this other group. Have they been surpassed or displaced by this new economic council? Perhaps some of them are members of this economic council but I do not readily recognize any of the names of any of them. But in addition to being confounded—that is confused, perplexed and dismayed—the hon. Minister lost no time after he reached a position of hegemony within the government, and I venture to say that his position of leadership and confidence where it counts is very high indeed within the government. One needs only to open his eyes to observe that phenomenon, and a developing phenomenon indeed it is.

An hon. member: He is a good man, that fellow.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I would hope so, but I cannot say the same for some of his hon. colleagues over there. I hope at least the offices of the Opposition are safe from his encroachments, at least in the immediate future.

Mr. Reaume: They are all mad, too.

Mr. Sopha: I was not going to say that, but my hon. friend from Essex North (Mr. Reaume) has a very pungent way of putting things, especially the truth.

But insofar as this economic advisory commission is concerned, I think the hon. Minister certainly owes an explanation to the House of what the effect of his hasty action in setting up his economic council has been with respect to their position.

Does it still function? Are they to be invited to play some part in the councils of government? In addition to the $150,000 that we are voting for the economic council, is part of this money or other public monies to be used to allow this organization, called the economic advisory committee, to continue to function?

I want to conclude on this note, and I want to say this, that all this manifest unfolded to us yesterday demonstrated that none of the problems is new, none of the things that the hon. Minister and his economic council are going to study, suddenly descended out of the heavens like a bolt of lightning and appeared to exist as a problem or a difficulty or a road block with respect to the affairs of this province.

The problems of automation, of sale of our surplus agricultural products, the problem of unemployment, the expansion of our industry, the taking away of industry from some urban centres, decentralization of industry, all of these problems have existed with us for a good long time. And as the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) so aptly put it, supported by the very able words of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), this smokescreen set up by the hon. Minister is nothing but a blind and an attempt to create the new image in order to hide the indictment of 20 years of Conservative rule that we have had.

The impression he is trying to convey in this House—if my words convey no other purpose, I want them to descend upon the ears of the hon. Minister in this fashion, that we over here are not going to be fooled. We are not going to be fooled. I said the more things change, the more they remain the same. The problems have been here and just because there is a sudden burst of activity—almost gymnastic schizophrenia, to to speak—he talks about his committees and his sub-committees, and we are going to look at all these problems, just as if this is a new departure or this is a new method of carrying on government.

And I just proffer this note of caution, that one year hence, when again he comes to the House and the public treasury, and he wants money to conduct his business, then there may be some of us here—all of us I hope that providence spares—who will look over the 20 points at that time, and we will ask him for an accounting.

We will say to him, "We gave you talents, we gave you the talents as in the Old Book, now show us what you have done to increase them. Make your report to us." And the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) in his perceptive and effective way, he can stand there then and ask him question after question, and tell us about the studies that the hon. Minister's economic council has made, tell us about the bacon and cheese and the radios, and the nickel, and the forest products that he has sold abroad—and the bologna that he has sold abroad.

That will be our opportunity, apart from all the words and all the verbiage and all the studies, for us to assess in real terms, whether we are justified in voting to the hon. Minister this vast amount of money that he wants. We will be here a year hence to get that accounting, to get that report of his stewardship from him.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I would say to the hon. member that I think his comments really do not amount to very much. He is fond of quoting French words, several of which he mispronounced, he lectured me about not pronouncing Mr. Gillis' name correctly, but I would like to point out to him that the president of the Ford Company is not Mr. "Rice" Sale, either.

I would say really and truly to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) if he summed it up, if he stood for the integrity of his party in foreign trade, then he does not want to do anything to help our economy. He made very derisive and attacking comments in relation to the question of an advisory council, but I want to quote to him a statement contained in the Toronto Daily Star of February 21, 1962; the contents of this were taken right out of this book:

Establishment of a national economic advisory council to aid private industries through crucial changes in the economy was advocated last night by Liberal leader Lester B. Pearson. Such a council, Mr. Pearson told a dinner meeting of the Toronto Junior Board of Trade, should include representatives of business, labour, agriculture and government. The council's function, he said, would be to find out and analyze what is going on.

Mr. Reaume: He is a good man, that fellow.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, he may be a good man but he apparently does not know what is going on.

And to study what is planned in all types of industry, in all regions of Canada, to study such major problems as automation, to investigate economic trends, to publish outlook reports and finally to make recommendations to government which in our system has and must retain the responsibility for policy of action. An economic council, he said, would aid in ensuring that Canada's economy now in a gentle upswing, continues to improve.

And so saith the gentleman.

It being 6 o'clock p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

On vote 302:

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I invite the hon. Minister to answer my query about the economic advisory council.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): There is no vote, as the hon. member will note, in relation to the economic committee to which he makes reference.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, that is hardly an answer. I referred to an announcement by the former hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost), setting up this body, and surely the Opposition is entitled to know what has happened to this body and what has happened to the personnel who were appointed to it by the man who formerly had the responsibility of leading the government.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: On what possible basis? They are voting no money for it, they are not asked to vote any money, and on what possible grounds have they any right?

Mr. Sopha: This is plainly a search for information and we are entitled to have this information from the responsible hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The purpose of the estimates is to discuss the various amounts of money which are requested for the purposes that are shown opposite the relative votes, and there is nothing here relating to this.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development has tried to advance this proposition previously, but I submit to you, sir, that in common sense and on the basis of recognized procedures in almost any parliamentary assembly, in voting money it is legitimate to inquire into the way that government has spent its money on similar matters in the past. That is a legitimate part of the inquiry, surely.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is perfectly proper, and if the hon. member can show the item in the public accounts relating to the question of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) I would be happy to discuss it.

Mr. Bryden: Well, of course the public accounts are a year old.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question. It is that there is no item in the accounts for the advisory council, but is it possible that the formation of an economic council, for which there is a cost of $150,000, could be a duplication of an advisory council that was set up by the former hon. Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, there is no possibility of that.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Chairman, with deference, I think the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) raises a very legitimate question here. I think that for years now we have proceeded on the theory that the estimates were an opportunity to examine into the operations of the various departments, and constantly we have asked for an opportunity to quiz a particular Minister with respect to a particular division of a department, and very often it was said: "Well, we will agree in this instance that you will do such and such under a given vote, even if there is no reference in the given vote to the subject matter," and I think Ontario Northland Railway, for example, is just such an illustration.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is something I offered. I do not really think that it needed to be done. It could have been done as it was done in the days, some years ago, through the committee on commissions. This is the only place it has ever been examined before. This year I thought the hon. members were quite entitled, and should properly ask questions about it, and therefore I suggested it be done this way.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, the point I am trying to make is that in any parliamentary institution a certain evolution takes place; it is bound to. One thing that we have got to come to grips with, in the course of the next few years, is the bureaucracies of government as such. We will have to find a new way of examining into all the bureaucracies some time, but surely tonight when we are concerned about the economic development of Ontario primarily, this is an appropriate time—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There is no indication of it so far. The Liberal Party is showing not one whit of interest in the economic development—

An hon. member: Why does the hon. Minister not answer the question?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. I take exception to what the hon. Minister has said.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) can take all the exception he likes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that you have to exercise a certain prerogative and that is to protect the position of our hon. members in this House. Anybody who has taken an elementary course in English and Canadian history knows that a function of the Opposition is to inquire into, on a broad scale, operations of the government, and I suggest to you that the very institution of this Parliament evolves from the original concept of the opportunity of free men to oppose the whims of the monarchy; and, as a resolution of that evolution, that performance that was originally intended to be performed by all the members of Parliament now evolves on a small section. I for one take exception to those who feel that we have no position here, and that we are trying to tear down and minimize and make fun of, if you will, the operation of government.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: You are.

Mr. Wintermeyer: We are not. This is our purpose, to come and examine into and to try to find weaknesses. What other time have we got to do it? Does the hon. Minister realize that these seven-odd precious weeks that we have are the only time that we can learn and get at and determine the effective operation of this government? This is the institution we live under. I for one feel that in these estimates somewhere there is every logical reason for asking the question: what has become of the advisory—or whatever its term—the advisory council that was instituted by the former regime?

I am sure that if it was not for a little bit of pique that has arisen somewhere, and I do not know where, the hon. Minister would never think of opposing this question. Of all the logic in the world, I think this question has much validity. And, Mr. Chairman, therefore I deal directly with you. When we are talking about this House and its operation, and it is a legitimate operation, as a member of this House I appeal to you to ask the hon. Minister to reconsider and to extend the courtesy of an answer to a question that has been asked by the hon. member for Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would point out to the Chairman, since the hon. leader of the Opposition is making a direct appeal to him in relation to what I would presume to be a point of order, that I should discuss under the heading of the vote now before us, vote 302, which is directed solely towards the operation of the economic council, why I should not now discuss some other item, and I am pointing out simply to the Chairman of the House that there is $150,000 requested for the operations of the economic council; there is nothing here in relation to the subject matter which he now has under discussion.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Chairman, it is a very simple question and I think it is a related one, too. This is the first time that I have ever seen, in the operation of this House over a long period of years, a responsible Minister of the Crown elect to set himself up as a czar, and refuses, because of a swelled head or something, to answer a very simple little thing. Now, we have asked him oftentimes. This is about the fifth time that we have asked this very simple thing, and why he will not answer it I do not know. It is nearly time I think that we asked another question. Who is the hon. Prime Minister of the province, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development or the man at the other side of him?

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, I submit to you, sir, has relied upon a technicality in withholding information which we are trying to obtain. He suggested earlier that if we could show any place in these estimates where there is anything for the advisory council, or in the public accounts, that it would be a different matter. I suggest to him that it is just as reasonable for us to use a technicality to prove that there is something in these estimates, and I refer to the matter of postage and stationery, if you will. Surely this group must have been contacted at one time or another by the government, either in that form or by telephone. I am sure that this would not have been made without—now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that of course this is a technicality and it is almost silly, but I submit to you, sir, that it is no more ridiculous than the reasons that are being given to the Opposition for not giving us this information.

I wonder if I might frame the question in another way. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us how the responsibilities which are to be given to the economic council differ from those of the previous economic advisory council.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is the prerogative of hon. Ministers to answer or to refuse to answer. It appears at this time he is refusing to answer, and I suggest to you, sir, that in so doing he is leaving us with nothing but suspicion; and in refusing to answer I submit that it is evidence of responsibility and that he is not able to answer. If he does not answer there is only one prerogative left and that is to vote against the estimates.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, may I have a word for a minute? I have never spoken on this vote at all.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, this afternoon one of the hon. members on this side of the House made a crack at the hon. Minister, that the only thing he failed to do was to take the right Dale Carnegie course, and I think he has proven the validity of this. All the hon. Minister had to do was explain this. That committee has now been superseded by another broader one in the development of his programme. It was a simple thing to say so, but the hon. Minister on occasion gets nasty and petty and peevish. I think he has brought the whole trouble on himself.

Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by Mr. Thomas: that in view of the hon. Minister's refusal to answer a reasonable question related to vote 302, the said vote be reduced to $1.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the motion will please say "Aye."

All those opposed say "Nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Those in favour will please rise.

Those opposed please rise.

I declare the motion lost.

Vote 302 agreed to.

On vote 303:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister which I think applies also to vote 304, so perhaps I can put the question in relation to both votes. I would judge that the economics branch and the economics statistics branch are the two principal research branches within the department. If I am correct in that assumption, I would like to ask the hon. Minister how many qualified economists and statisticians are employed in those two branches.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Which branch?

Mr. Bryden: We are on vote 303, and I was making my question applicable also to vote 304.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We will come to vote 304 when we do. There are 20 in relation to vote 303.

Mr. Bryden: Twenty economists!

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: On 303 and 304.

Mr. Bryden: In relation to the two of them?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes!

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. The studies that were made by the former Department of Commerce and Development, I presume, will apply; or will these reports made by the economic development committee on forestry, on agriculture, on transportation, on tourism and all the investigations made in those reports now be thrown out the window? It is no wonder that like that other soldier of classical times, the former hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Nickle) apparently is sulking in his tent, because he is not here.

As the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) said this afternoon, it was "pot-pourri"; and somebody else said window dressings. I think probably with the close approach of St. Patrick's day, one might call it an Irish stew.

Seriously, sir, if hon. members look at it, I suggest they could save a lot of money in this department by buying a subscription to the Monetary Times! It has all sorts of material about northern and northwestern Ontario and northeastern Ontario and research committees from that Department of Commerce and Development have gone up there. They sat at the head of the lakes, they sat at North Bay, at Timmins. All that information, apparently is not wanted at all by this particular hon. Minister.

Professor McDougall has already conducted a survey of the Ontario Northland Railway in regard to the transportation. He was directed by the former hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost) to do it. I cannot see how much more the hon. Minister is going to get from this present investigation.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Hon. members opposite would not do anything anyway.

Mr. Troy: It is better to do nothing than to do something the wrong way. Are these investigations of any use to the hon. Minister's department? If he has not got them, I can send them over.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Thanks! Do that!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, recently, the special economic survey of the Lake Ontario region was released and distributed to the hon. members. I understand it was the fifth in a series of 10 regional reports by the province of Ontario. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us when the remaining five surveys might be completed.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The report to which the hon. member refers is actually under vote 304, but I will answer it here if he will repeat the question. I am sorry, I did not hear what the question was.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, my question related to the studies and the surveys which have been concluded by The Department of Economics dealing with the economic surveys in the various regions of the 10 areas into which Ontario was broken into for this particular purpose. My question is: when will the remaining five surveys be completed and when will they be published?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member that they are done as quickly as we can do them. We have done five or six of them now and there are a number yet to complete. A number of them are under study at the moment and our anticipation is that we will produce one every nine to 12 months. They are quite detailed. They take a great deal of time, and I should think that would be about the programme.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell me: is there not a problem when they are so far apart, does it not follow with some logic that, by the time the entire survey is completed, the original report is somewhat obsolete?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, each report would be up to date. All reports are not analogous, or commencing from the same starting point, but each report itself is up to date when it comes out.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, it seems to me that they do not tie into the overall programme. My understanding was that for the purposes of producing the information, Ontario was broken into these ten regions. Now I suggest that if it takes this long, by the time these reports are ready, the original ones are of little significance in the overall picture. That is what I am suggesting.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I would say this to the hon. member that the Deputy Minister advised me that, instead of nine months, it is about six months. These reports are published about every six months. After the reports have been published, the up-to-date information in connection with each one of them is sent out to the various regions.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I have one other question and I presume it would come under these estimates, Mr. Chairman. It deals with the matter of co-operation with the universities in the matter of the entire economic picture. It so happened that recently a report came to my desk dealing with an area under another jurisdiction where they make full use of the universities with respect to the compiling of information, research and what-have-you.

I wonder, how much does this department co-operate with the various universities? Are we getting the maximum from the universities that are growing in our province and are available?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think so, yes.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: To what extent do we co-operate? In what way do we co-operate with the universities?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, for example, just one that I can think of: the preparation of the submissions to the Royal commission on banking and finance. We have had five or six meetings with two or three of the professors—one from McMaster, one from Queen's and one from Toronto—and we have plotted out the programme that we contemplate would be wise to represent in our submission, and we have allotted to each one of ourselves the various areas and the comments after a number of meetings. This takes place in relation to a number of the studies that we are undertaking. This is true in relation to Professor Bladen and a number of others.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Could I ask if the hon. Minister is using—I am thinking of university staffs during their holidays—if he is giving grants for special studies by these experienced men who would not want to be full time on the government? Is he using, for example, various departments of economics in the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, our obligation, sir, is to prepare the material which we need, rather than to fill the summer holidays of anyone else. Now if our obligation meets the summer holiday requirement of these people then we join these forces together.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I appreciate the hon. Minister is interested in the summer holiday—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In fact we take on in the summer, in the neighbourhood—

Mr. Thompson: Whom does the hon. Minister take on in the summer?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We take on about 10 economists in the summer.

Mr. Thompson: I had a further question here. I noticed in the 1960-1961 Department of Economics, public account, report—I presume that The Department of Economics is now the economics branch; am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, there is no—it is a very difficult thing to place actually. Just suppose any specific vote in the estimates of this department is in relation to the department which existed before. We have tried to streamline this, reduce our staff and change some of the functions. So it is very difficult, there is a considerable overlap.

Mr. Thompson: Well, could I ask the hon. Minister this? In the estimates of 1960-1961, under The Department of Economics, there were fees and expenses for special studies in research, and the names under this were D. C. McGregor, Mercer, Shepherd. They do not seem to be in these estimates. Is that because their studies are finished or are they being continued under another department?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would be happy to look up that information for the hon. member and send it to him.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. Minister: has the department taken any study as to the amount of printing that is done outside the province of Ontario? I specifically refer to supplements of the various magazines or newspapers—likewise the various containers. I can recall popsicles, ice cream phosphates and various other types of containers similar to that. I understand they are printed in the United States and then imported into Canada. Is there any study taken concerning that?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In relation to the amount of printing which is done generally outside this province, I can say to the hon. member who asked the question, there is, as he knows, a great deal of refining of the pulp and paper industry in this province, and the export and the buying back. This is one of the items in the fabrication gap that we are hoping to help close.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I have wondered for some time whether the hon. Minister has determined the purpose and operation, if you will, of this particular branch in the overall department. Now heretofore it was a separate department.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think it would be easiest, perhaps, if I referred the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) to these notes that I have. The duties of this particular branch, as opposed to several others—and they come quite close to one another, I acknowledge—but it has a number, and the first is that it undertakes research and studies on the Ontario and Canadian economics, such as manufacturing, capital investments, population, employment, trade relations, economic problems of individual industries and localities.

Second, its purpose is to maintain a continuing review of economic trends and conditions and prepare monthly reviews of economic trends.

Yesterday, if the hon. leader of the Opposition will recall, there was distributed to him a review of economic trends, which is a bi-monthly review of economic trends. It has had up to now a very limited circulation but I have asked that it be circulated to the hon. members of the House.

It is really a very worthwhile document. I think the hon. member will obtain a great deal of value from it. I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman, as in anything that relates to the temperature of a patient, or the ups and downs of an economy, it may have some good news and some bad news, but I think hon. members are entitled to get both. So I have asked that this be distributed. It is very well written and I think the hon. members will obtain a great deal from it.

Third, it provides a secretariat for the special commissions or committees such as the committee on portable pensions, the Ontario fluoridation investigation committee, and so on. Its fourth responsibility is to prepare the Minister's economic statement—which, incidentally, although it may seem long and tedious and full of charts, and so on, is a very difficult document to prepare. It takes a great deal of time and, frankly, is worth some study. It helps to prepare material for the province's submission to the Royal commissions, a number of which I have mentioned this afternoon.

And last, the branch prepares memoranda on specific problems, information on specific problems as they may develop. This is how we have tried to break down the responsibilities of the economics branch.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is exactly the information that I sought, and I would say very frankly I think this is a commendable thing that more information of this sort be—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I just say this to my hon. friend, who I know has a great interest in all these economic publications: we have a large number, a number of which we will be releasing to the House or to the hon. members very soon. My purpose in the coming year, in addition to the other things that I have said, is to keep hon. members as well advised as I possibly can, because I think, regardless of how partisan people may be in this House, a well-informed member of this House is a very good representative of the province.

An hon. member: That is a good idea.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Minister tell me if a study has been made of the fiscal relation between governments?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, and this relates to a vote somewhat further on.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry that I did not hear you.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This relates to a vote somewhat further on.

Votes 303 to 305, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 306—I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he is going to debate vote 306 and vote 312 at the same time?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, both together.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask a question on vote 305.

An hon. member: It is too late.

Another hon. member: No, it is not too late.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 305:

Mr. Sopha: I wanted merely to ask the hon. Minister what the organization in vote 305—finance and administration branch—does?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think, unlike my hon. friend who handles the language with such facility, that it is easier perhaps if I read to him the four specific assignments which we arranged some weeks after these two departments were organized:

(1) To undertake financial research into questions of interest to the government, the department and other government departments; (2) To maintain a continuing review of the bond market, interest rates, exchange rates, etc., in Canada and the United States, United Kingdom and elsewhere; (3) To provide administrative services for the department; and (4) To undertake any specific tasks which were assigned to it by any one of the departments.

Mr. Sopha: I thank the hon. Minister for that very comprehensive answer. Now that he and I have established rapport perhaps he will tell me what happened to the economic advisory council?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, as a matter of fact, I want frankly to say to the hon. member, in that it is he who has asked me, that it is still where it was.

Interjections by hon members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I assume, sir, that we are dealing with 306 and 312 as one item.

An hon. member: We are on 305.

Mr. Bryden: Are we still on 305? Do you want to deal with 305?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, I do not suppose I will get any further, Mr. Chairman, but I wanted, if I could, to pursue this just a little. Does this financial and administrative branch—I understand that it inquires into economic financial policy and I refer back to the publication I referred to earlier in the day. Does this department make any economic forecasts into the future—in other words, the affairs of this province, say, five years from now? Do they do any work along this line?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to my hon. friend, who has asked a most proper question, the basic purpose of the finance and administration branch is to look after the administration of the department. That is to say, pay, personnel and so forth. In addition to that it undertakes specific studies that may be given to it either by the Minister, or through the Minister by other departments.

Mr. Thompson: I think one of the questions that is in our minds is about the so-called secret report to the federal government—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I assure the hon. member that we have no secret reports whatsoever. In addition to the things which have been mentioned, that the finance and administration branch carries out, is an analysis of enrolment staff and financial position of each of the 13 universities receiving provincial grants, undertaken on behalf of the university affairs committee. There are a number of other studies, we have a number of them here, but our job is as a central clearing house for research; our job is to do these things which are asked of us by the departments.

Mr. Thompson: I apologize that I am not sure, in view of the many departments that the hon. Minister heads, under which I should ask this question. Surely he has some kind of a forecast of the economy each year on which he gauges his budget? Does his department provide this forecast?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What kind of a forecast?

Mr. Thompson: An economic forecast on which the hon. Minister decides how he can make his policies each year.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I just made reference to this in terms of the booklet which I handed out to hon. members yesterday. Did the hon. member read it?

Mr. Thompson: No, I have not had a chance yet.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think when he has read that he will realize that answers the question.

Mr. Thompson: That is the forecast?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes. Well, it is the question the hon. member has asked.

Mr. Thompson: I want to know about the forecast.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am not sure what the hon. member expects.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, we have been very busy since this book arrived, but I would say that I have looked through it and—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member does not have it open at the moment.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: —and I do not see too much of an analysis with respect to the economic and financial conditions and trends. Is this of the province or the government?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is this the book the hon. member has? Would he hold the book up so I can see that he is reading from it?

Interjections by hon members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: First of all, I did not tell the hon. Minister I was reading from the book but I do have it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member asked this same question under another heading and I did my very best to answer him then.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the question I am specifically asking now is with respect to the function of the department as set out by his own Deputy Minister.

One function, section (a) is the economic—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It was not set out by the Deputy Minister, I decided what it would be and I told the hon. member how it has been settled.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, he has not told me, because I have not asked the question yet. I do not know how he could tell me before I have asked the question.

The question I ask is this: the book that I have in front of me states that one of the functions of the department is to analyze and advise upon, and make recommendations on matters pertaining to economic and financial conditions and trends. My question to the hon. Minister is: Is this referring to trends in the province or trends of the government?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This relates to trends—I mean the fact that the hon. member would ask about trends in the department simply is so ridiculous as to be beyond words—but it relates, if he will just sit down; can he?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Or was his stamping an indication that he has something to get rid of other than in here?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member, I spent an hour and half in this House and distributed an economic statement of this province relating to the last year and the forecast for the present, and here it is. Has he read it? Was he here when that was presented?

The point is that this economic statement answers the two questions he has asked.

Are these economic trends from the department? No, they are in relation to the provincial economy and they are set out in my economic statement.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has said that the word "trends" was completely irresponsible and that it should not be talked about in this debate.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I did not say at any time that "trends" was irresponsible or make any reference to it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to get rid of that I am not going to get rid of right here. The hon. Minister has inferred to me that the trends he spoke of are the trends of the economic situation in the province generally. I wonder if I am correct that far. Would the hon. Minister assure me?

Now I do not find that compatible with the other functions as set out in this report. This speaks of economic and fiscal policy, fiscal relations between governments and any other matter referred by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. It goes on to say that one of the most important functions of the department is a continuing review carried out with respect to tax-sharing arrangements and the various sources of revenue and expenditure.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is because my hon. friend is on the wrong vote. Which vote is he talking about?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am talking about the statistics.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, we are not. This is not the vote now before the House.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are dealing with vote 305, financial administration.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Is that not the vote with which we are dealing?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not know, the hon. member is the one—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I thought we were dealing with financial administration and I thought this was financial administration. The hon. Minister advises me I am not speaking on the right vote. What vote would this subject that I am talking about come under?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is a very difficult thing to say.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: It is all very well to be sarcastic, but I would remind the hon. Minister that I am getting my information from the document which came out of his department.

Surely, somewhere in these estimates, there should be an opportunity to question the functions of the department as outlined in the hon. Minister's own publication. I raised this under the very first vote. He did not answer me at that time and I assumed that it was proper to raise it under financial administration. Now if the hon. Minister is not going to answer me and he is going to lean on the technicality that this is not the proper vote, I ask him what the proper vote is so that one year from now I will at least be on the right vote when I wish to ask a question and he will not be able to use that as a technicality. Now surely that is a reasonable question.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not know, my hon. friend. I would not for a moment want to withhold any information which he would ask for rightly, but I would think even my obligation to answer them when he has, as he has, impolitely asked for them—but if the hon. member would tell me what question it is that he has to ask, I will do my best to obtain the information for him, if he can put it succinctly, without a lot of sarcasm, and get down to the point.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would consider that it would not be sarcastic of me if I were to send him the booklet that I have in front of me published by his department, and referring particularly to page 24. I have the items marked and underlined. I wonder if he would look at it and tell me what portion of his estimates will relate to the information as contained on that page. If he would do that, I would be pleased to bring this stuff under the correct vote.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If the hon. member mails it to me, I would be happy to look at it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would be pleased to send it over with a page-boy at this time; and I would think that it would be courtesy on the part of the hon. Minister to give me the information at this time so that we can deal with it under his estimates.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If the hon. member will send it over, I will look at it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, might I ask what vote we are on?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 305.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I object to it being carried until I get an answer, because then we will use the technicality that—

Mr. Chairman: Send the book over then.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member that he has underlined a considerable number of portions of this page, all of which relate to the operations of the department, and if he would be kind enough to give me the specific questions that are concerning him, I would be happy to send him the answers.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that the questions are on record, and I wonder if he would undertake to send me the answers.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if the hon. member thinks that they are on record, I will send them to him.

Vote 305 agreed to.

On vote 306:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I have some comments I would like to make with regard to vote 306 and the related vote of 312, both of which relate to the housing branch. It would appear from announcements made to us during the past few weeks that this government is the most studious government in the history of British parliamentary institutions. Everything under the sun is under study; nothing whatever is under way, or practically nothing, and this is nowhere better demonstrated than in relation to the government's housing programme.

We have had a number of announcements of this programme. I will give the government credit for this; they have learned the technique of the old master, who used to lead the government over there, of getting every conceivable drop of publicity out of even the driest sponge. They announce the same thing over and over and over again, and that is what they have been doing with housing.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member has been reading Mr. O'Hearn's column.

Mr. Bryden: Well, it is very useful reading. I did not particularly read that one, but if Mr. O'Hearn was the first one to call attention to this then I will give him full credit for his perspicacity.

I will refer to one of the announcements only; the one that was the most comprehensive and possibly even the most authoritative since it came from the hon. Prime Minister. That was his announcement in this House before the orders of the day, on February 23, of a so-called 12-point housing programme, which he declared to be "a new, broader and bolder approach to public housing." Three of the points were matters which the government was discussing with the federal government with no indication of action on any of them. As to the rest, they were mainly matters that were under study. There is one, item No. 4, I think, on which a certain amount of minimum action is being taken. We find, however, that in item No. 5, the government is planning "to explore what can be done" to encourage preventive maintenance of housing. In No. 6 we are told that "studies will be carried out" with regard to the provision of assistance to individuals and municipalities in acquiring borderline housing units.

Item No. 7 declares that "there are numerous possibilities under study" with regard to limited dividend housing. Item No. 8: "We are studying a plan to assist by guaranteeing loans for interim financing," etc. Item No. 9 deals with "studies to be undertaken." Item No. 10 now puts the whole thing in one pot; it says we are going to set up "a permanent housing advisory committee." So we are studying everything under the sun and then we are setting somebody up to study us. I take it that is the significance of this.

The 11th point is different, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the House will distinguish the subtle distinction. It provides that grants will be provided so that people can study the question. Finally, item No. 12 is in much the same category, although I think a little more practical. It is one that I would almost put under the category of action. The government is going to co-operate with CHMC in encouraging research into improved building methods, which I think is a very necessary and important item.

However, out of the 12 items in this so-called new housing programme, at least 10 indicate merely various types of study that the government is undertaking. Then, just in case any of us missed the point, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) stated in his conclusion that "it is obvious that we cannot leap into many of the matters that I have mentioned here, without further study."

So we will conclude that the government is engaged in some study of the housing programme and the very serious and acute problem of providing public housing for the very substantial portion of families who really cannot afford private housing.

One asks the question as to what the government has been doing since 1943, that all these urgent matters are now for the first time being studied and the government cannot leap into action on any of them because it still has to study. It would appear, Mr. Chairman, that in this particular area the new administration is doing exactly what the old administration used to do, and even the older one before that.

One of the controllers of the city of Toronto, who at one time sat in this House, stated, a good many years ago, that in this province we have housing by headline. I think it was a very apt statement at the time he made it, and it is a very apt statement now. We never get any housing, we merely get a lot of announcements that catch headlines as to what the government is thinking of doing. I would guess that anyone who checks back through the records would find that every year the government made an announcement of a bold new approach to the problem of housing and once again we have an announcement of a bold new approach.

Actually, it is hard to see what is so bold about it. As I have mentioned before, the amount of money that is to be appropriated for this bold new housing programme—if we take both the vote for current expenditure, vote 306, and the vote for capital disbursements, vote 312—if we add the two we come to a grand total of $6,667,000. This is approximately the amount of money that this House has voted to the government for housing every year for as long as anybody can remember. It is perfectly true that in the past the government never spent the money that was voted to it, pitiful as that amount of money was.

It is possible that this year they plan to spend it; I do not know. That would make a slight improvement. I would still suggest, Mr. Chairman, it is a picayune amount when one considers the very urgent need which continues to exist in this province, as far as housing facilities for at least a third of the population is concerned at the lower end of the income scale.

The hon. Minister seems to be somewhat self-conscious on this matter because, in the statement he made on Tuesday in introducing the estimates of the department, he said at page ten of that statement: "The dollar value of the programme is not nearly as important at this stage as the prospects which it holds for the public."

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that prospects make very poor shelter against the weather. It really is time, after nearly 20 years of Tory administration in this province, that the people had something more than prospects as far as houses are concerned.

The one item which seems to be of some practical significance, and with which the government is making some attempt to proceed at the present time, is the so-called rent certificate scheme. For this particular scheme they are appropriating the tremendous sum of $50,000 so that one can expect a tremendous dent is going to be made in the backlog of housing demands and housing needs with that particular item. The government frankly says that it is an experimental project.

I would suggest that it is an experiment that should be watched very carefully because

I think there is a serious danger that it will in fact be much less of a means of providing low rental housing to families that need it and much more of a method of protecting landlords from the normal economic force. There is now a surplus of high priced housing accommodation in this city. The city is overbuilt to a considerable degree in the rental area of $125, $150 a month and so on.

We are grossly short of housing that low income families can afford. And here is a plan whereby the government, or the city of Toronto with the assistance of the government, is going to take off the market some of these vacant units, pay the landlord the rent that he was not able to charge for the apartment, and then subsidize the landlord by charging the tenant somewhat less than the price the landlord was asking.

I suggest that it might be better if this government, which always claims that it believes in free competition—although I must say that there has been very little evidence in its actions that it ever believed in that—let the force of competition operate. Maybe some of these rents would come down by themselves, especially if we changed the law by removing that provision in The Assessment Act which now permits landlords who have a certain vacancy rate to get a reduction in their taxes on account of the vacancies.

The situation we are now in is that landlords are on the one hand making provision for vacancies in the rent they charge, and then they get provision for vacancy made again in a reduction of taxes. Now the government is giving them a third bulwark, it is introducing a plan that will help to maintain their rents at the uneconomic level at which they are now being set.

I am prepared to see what happens with this experiment, but I think we should be very much aware of the pitfalls that are inherent in it. I think very careful attention should be paid to make sure that the plan does not essentially become a scheme for the protection of landlords rather than for the benefit of low income families.

Whether my fears with regard to this plan are justified or not, I would suggest that that particular item is a pretty picayune affair when one considers that, apart from study, it is pretty well the sum total of the new broader and bolder approach to public housing to which the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) made reference in his statement of February 23.

I was appalled to read, Mr. Chairman, in the hon. Provincial Treasurer's (Mr. Allan's) budget statement, that the province last year, or during the fiscal year which is now coming to an end, will spend only $2 million, as far as capital budget is concerned, for housing in this province. The amount that we voted last year for capital was, I think—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Might I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that it is not in the year that is just coming to an end: I think the booklet that he has ends in 1961, does it not?

Mr. Bryden: This is on the top of page 27 of the hon. Provincial Treasurer's budget.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry, I thought the hon. member was reading from the—

Mr. Bryden: Well, it really does not matter because it was the same last year too, and the year before, and the year before that. Always we have voted some such sum as $5.6 million for capital purposes for housing, and always the expenditure turned out to be a million and a half or two million dollars. Never was the money spent, even though the original vote was totally inadequate.

My submission, Mr. Chairman, is that the kind of statement the hon. Prime Minister has made, and which has been repeated in condensed form both by the hon. Provincial Treasurer and the hon. Minister in the introduction of his estimates, does not indicate any serious intention to tackle the housing problem. There are one or two minor little devices which are being undertaken or considered that might improve the situation, but basically the problem of public housing is still not being approached.

The most one can say is that once again, for at least the last 15 years, the newspapers have risen to the bait and produced screaming headlines to the effect that something will be done about housing.

Now, I have the greatest of respect for all the newspapers and the newspaper men in this province, but I really do think it is time they wised up to this housing situation. They have fallen for this line every year for as long as I can remember, and I think it would be useful if they would actually analyze what has gone on and what is now contemplated and publish the true facts which are that we still do not have anything approaching an adequate housing programme.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, unlike the hon. member for Woodbine, I would like to sincerely commend the government for this bold new plan of housing, especially the rental certificate plan that has been announced by the hon. Prime Minister.

Now, I must admit that perhaps I have not studied the announcement to the extent that I should have, but there are one or two aspects of it that rather puzzle me. First of all, as a member in this House for an area of the city of Toronto—in which this plan, I think, could be put immediately to work—am I to assume that this rental certificate plan must work through a municipal housing authority scheme? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member who asked the question, that this is a pilot scheme and we are going to try it out for the first 12 months in Metropolitan Toronto and it will work through Metro Toronto housing.

Mr. Lawrence: This was the point I was confused by. Is it going to work through the Toronto Housing Authority or the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The Metropolitan.

Mr. Lawrence. Metropolitan. That is what I was asking, I thank the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think I might say just while I have the opportunity, that while the hon. member for Woodbine has made much fun of this housing programme, I think it is worthwhile noting that under this rent certificate scheme alone, in four months we are going to put in occupation a number of families almost equal to the number that Saskatchewan has put into occupation in 18 years.

I thought that since the hon. member for Woodbine has been so attentive to the inadequacies of our programme, he might be interested in knowing that in the province of Ontario we have one of these public housing units to about every 1,000 people in the province. In Saskatchewan they have one to 3,600. In fact, the total programme of Saskatchewan is 264 units, the total of all of Canada other than Ontario is 3,434, and Ontario's is 5,766.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if the hon. Minister is proud of that—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, just a moment—the hon. member was the one who objected when he had the floor and asked me not to make my speech during his; was that right? The hon. member has not even the manners to get up, he just lies there and makes his speeches.

Basically speaking, I think you have to look at these things in their relationship to one another. The hon. member has said that we have had in the budget $5 million or $6 million and we have voted $5 million or $6 million and have only spent $2.5 million.

I want to say to the hon. member, so that he understands, this has been so recently because there have not been the programmes coming forth from the municipalities in relation to it. I want, however, to assure the hon. member of this, that we now have in hand a number of projects equal to, if not exceeding—but at least equal to in our anticipation—the number of dollars that we are asking this House to vote, and we have every reason to expect that we will live up dollar for dollar to the amount that we are asking the House to give us.

But I want to tell you something else, that the hon. member made much fun of us about the fact that we have had 20 years of Tory administration, and that we have made no dent in the housing problem. I can only say, as I have said, that we have made this dent, that we have one unit for every 1,000 people, whereas as opposed to Saskatchewan one unit for every 3,600; and furthermore, that in four months with this rental certificate scheme, we anticipate in this province we will put into occupation almost the same number of families that Saskatchewan took 18 years to put in.

The hon. member and his party talk about people being doctrinaire. It seems to me that there is time, and this is the time, to have a fresh look. Hon. members opposite have made a lot of fun, all of them, they have made a great deal of fun about these studies.

Now, I am not worried about the sympathetic understanding. I am close; my borders are contiguous—I will spell it, I will send the hon. member a note—my borders are contiguous to the hon. member's, and as far as I am concerned, I put this to him. The hon. member is talking in terms of housing in the most doctrinaire fashion. He has the concept that unless you spend millions of dollars you have accomplished nothing. One of the greatest things that can be done in terms of housing is to slow up the dilapidation of areas, to slow up the areas which will otherwise become very expensive redevelopment areas, to pick into the areas of buying or leasing houses which stop a general blight in an area.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member has no interest in it at all. Unless there are millions of dollars spent—now let me just give a concrete example. We are putting in 200 people by rent certificates—this is a new idea and it has never been tried anywhere in the world—we are putting 200 people, 200 families in four months into occupation to try this out in a pilot plan. To do this same programme in low cost housing units would have cost $3 million. The subsidy in terms of this rental will be about $20 a month, and do you know, in the city of Toronto at the moment, the subsidy, even without spending the capital amount, is between $38 and $42? This is a new approach that the hon. members are making fun of simply because they are doctrinaire and do not understand these conditions.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) talk a little while ago about the lack of housing in this province and how little this government had done about housing. I wonder if he has the latest copy of the Review of Economic Trends in Ontario for February and March of this year. Now, will he please open it, if he has it, at page 9, and read what is going on in Ontario as far as housing is concerned, in addition to what the hon. Minister has mentioned. I will read it for him if he has not got the economic survey on his desk. I quote:

New residential construction continued strongly into the new year with January starts 11.2 per cent higher than in January 1961. Completions 18 per cent higher, and units under construction by the end of the month, 22.2 per cent higher and close to half the national total.

How do hon. members like that? And they say this government has done nothing for housing.

If I were the hon. member for Woodbine I would go down and confine myself a little more often in the Don Jail. He will learn something about housing there and be able to tell us about it; he seems very interested in the Don institution.

I am amazed at all this talk decrying this new scheme that our able young hon. Minister, who is bringing new thoughts to this province—and this government—is trying to do, and I think it ill behooves hon. members to try and tear down the things that he is endeavouring to build up to make this province more prosperous.

In my area I think they would be amazed if they heard the hon. member say that he was withholding information. All the papers, radio and television have been full, over the past two or three weeks, of what his department is endeavouring to do. We have one of the best known and finest economists in this province as the Deputy Minister of this department, in the person of Mr. Gathercole. I think even hon. members of the Opposition must admit that. They have a young hon. Minister who has got the drive and the energy and the—

An hon. member: Baloney!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I will say that the hon. member can get deficiency payments on his baloney if he wishes.

But he is a man that is trying to do something to promote the economy of the province. Now, up in my area this department has been most favourably accepted, by all parts of northwestern Ontario. We have a man who has been chosen there as head of the economic council for the area; who is one of our greatest industrialists, one of our most travelled men. Many hon. members know him, Mr. Clark. He has gathered around him, in that area, our best brains and our best industrialists, and they are—

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Who are they?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member knows some of them. He knows Mr. Andrews, he knows Mr. Patterson; and all the rest of them up there. He should get in with them, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple), and do something up there for his area to make it grow and prosper.

Now the hon. member decries the development fund for the north. The hon. Minister mentioned the development fund for the north. Our people are looking forward with great anticipation—

Mr. MacDonald: What estimate is this on?

An hon. member: What vote is this on?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Why does the hon. member have to fall back on noise and criticism—to try to stop us talking over here, and alerting the people of this province to the improvements we are trying to build up?

The development fund for the north has caused a great deal of interest—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: On a question of order, Mr. Chairman. A question of order, Mr. Chairman!

Mr. Chairman, we were discussing the estimate dealing with housing. Is it appropriate to go back to the northern development fund which has been considered and voted on repeatedly in earlier votes?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): A little bit of stifling from the other side.

Mr. MacDonald: We had it from the hon. members opposite all the time. Let us keep it in order. The hon. Minister has been trying all evening to keep on the right estimates.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Hon. members opposite love to hang on any crutch they can get. They do not like to hear of improvements we are making. They cannot take it.

I was mentioning the enthusiasm that the economic council has sparked in housing and other things in the north, and I do think it ill behooves our Opposition to try and decry this department. Many things have already developed due to this economic council and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple) will notice it very soon in that area. One of the most startling things to me, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that we may have diamond discoveries in this country.

Mr. Reaume: That is what the hon. Minister has been saying for years.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I have never mentioned it before. No, this is a comparatively new thing, and I would give great credit to this Department of Economics for seeing that these things are being uncovered and made possible. This is an enterprising department with a group of dedicated, expert men who are going to do things for this province and any hon. members in the Opposition—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

An hon. member: I have heard of Diamond Jim Brady, now we have Diamond George Wardrobe.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The hon. member's glasses are fogging up over there. They do not want to see the sunshine.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I am amazed at the courtesy from the Opposition benches. I have sat here and tried to get on my feet hours at a time, and this is the courtesy shown—typical of the hon. members opposite—

An hon. member: They are rude.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: They are exceedingly rude. I have a better word for it—if I was not in this House.

But, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say this, that when the hon. Minister brought out the figures of Saskatchewan as against Ontario, and what has been done out there, it ill behooves the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) to get up and decry the efforts of the whole council.

Now I was checked on talking outside of one vote but hon. members over there get all around the whole field and try to get to the centre and never do. They are still in the outfield, missing flies. I just want to say, if they want to earn the observation of the voters in this province they will go along with these votes of the economic council because, in my opinion and that of others I have spoken to in this province, it is one of the greatest forward steps that has been brought about during the regime of any government of this province.

I think we will see great returns from it. I know in my area it is exceedingly popular. I will tell hon. members that many new natural resources are going to come to their attention before too long, due in great part to the efforts of the economic council, whose estimates we are voting on tonight. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, when people get up and talk a lot of foolishness on another vote we are not on, that you sharply rap—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Now that the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe) has provided a suitable interlude of comic relief, maybe we can get back to the business at hand, which is a vote related to housing, vote 306 and 312.

The hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay), I have noticed, has always been obsessed with the province of Saskatchewan. I can understand this in view of the fact that the development of that province under a CCF administration has certainly been most remarkable; and I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I will be very happy to debate the record of the government of Saskatchewan with the hon.

Minister at any suitable time and place he may care to name. But I believe, sir, that in this House we should deal with the affairs of the province of Ontario; and that is what I was dealing with and that is what I always wish to deal with, notwithstanding all the red herrings and diversions that we get from the benches opposite.

I would suggest, further, Mr. Chairman, that to compare the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Ontario in a matter of housing is totally irrelevant. To compare the tremendous congestion we have in this province with what is still, notwithstanding considerable industrial diversification, a basically agricultural province, is completely irrelevant. If that is the best sort of defence the hon. Minister can put up, it is a very weak defence indeed.

The hon. Minister suggested in his impassioned reply to me—I regret that he is in such an irritable mood tonight, almost anything gets him mad—and he got very annoyed indeed because I ventured to criticize the lack of performance of the government and its present policy—that lack of performance in the past was due to the failure of municipalities to come forward with suitable plans. That, Mr. Chairman, is certainly far from the whole truth.

A year and a half ago, five projects that had been planned by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and had been approved for six months, were in a condition of suspended animation because of the flat refusal of this government to give the final okay to go ahead. I will take some credit for having helped to break that log jam and at least get those five projects going ahead. There were only five, and not very big projects, but the flat refusal of the government to act, even when there were legitimate and approved municipal programmes before them, was a major factor in the past in preventing or delaying the development of public housing in the province.

Another factor, and a major and continuing factor, is the doctrinaire attitude of the federal hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), who is the member of Parliament for Rosedale constituency, who turns his face in a determined way against any kind of public housing and insists in the most doctrinaire fashion that housing must be turned over to private developers. That has been another major stumbling block to the development of public housing programmes in this province.

The hon. Minister has developed a passionate affection for his rent certificate plan.

I can perhaps understand his reactions on this point, because this really is the only concrete point in the whole 12-point programme. I suppose when one even dares to question that, one strikes a very sensitive spot. I would like to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that I raised certain questions about it. I said that I was prepared, however, to watch the results of the experiment to see what happened. It is quite possible, I do not deny the possibility, that it may make a useful contribution; but to suggest that this is a substitute for urban redevelopment and the construction of low-rental housing units and low-cost housing units, is sheer nonsense. It may have a small palliative effect, but certainly we still need important housing developments.

Apparently the hon. Minister considers that if one advocates the construction of housing units, one is doctrinaire. I do not consider that to be doctrinaire at all. It is the only full solution to the problem and I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that capital invested in housing units actually adds little, if anything, to the net debt of the province, because most of it is recovered over a period of time in the rentals that come back. Most of it is, it depends on the particular form of the scheme and on the degree to which it is subsidized. And even our limited experience in Canada with public housing indicates that there are many other attendant benefits which probably mean that there is no net cost at all.

Now the hon. Minister, without any justification whatsoever, jumped to the conclusion that I was not prepared to consider measures designed to slow down the process, reverse the process, towards urban blight. That is the most ridiculous proposition, the most ridiculous straw man, I have ever heard. The fact of the matter is that it is this government that has never been prepared to consider any measures along that line, and they are now in a situation where they have considered it so little that they have no programme to put forward. They are merely studying possibilities to see what they might do, that is according to the hon. Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts') own statement.

For years I have suggested that policies should be adopted to eliminate or reduce urban blight. But even that is not a substitute for redevelopment; because in some areas the blight has proceeded too far. Redevelopment certainly has to be undertaken. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the excited defence by the hon. Minister of the very little programme that has been put before us was, by virtue of its very excitement, an indication of the hon. Minister's own realization of the inadequacy of his programme.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question before he sits down? I believe it is one thing to attack an hon. member in this House who can stand up and defend himself, but to attack an hon. Minister of the federal government sitting at Ottawa is a completely different thing. I wonder if the well-tailored and vivacious hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) would mind informing the House just exactly when, where, how and under what conditions the federal hon. Minister of Public Works, the federal hon. member for Rosedale, Mr. Walker, deprecated and completely threw over any idea or theory of public housing in Canada.

Mr. Bryden: I did not say he completely threw it over, but if the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) is not familiar with the statements that the federal hon. Minister has made on the subject, I must say that I do not think it is worth taking the time of the House to enlighten him. As far as attacks are concerned: I think my attack on the hon. Minister was a fair attack, but if it was not a fair attack, I am quite content to apologize.

I would suggest, however, Mr. Chairman, that the complaint about it comes very strangely from an hon. member who sits in this House and went out of the House to deliver on myself a totally unfounded and unwarranted attack based on nothing but lies. I think that his suggestion that my criticism of the federal hon. Minister is inappropriate comes very poorly from him.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest when the hon. Minister told us that they were now going to provide for 200 families, that they had the units. That suddenly, after 20 years, they could find room for 200 families. When hon. members consider that the two housing authorities here in the city have a waiting-list of 12,000 families, they can see that the government has been sitting around doing nothing for an awful long time.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That statement is an intentional misrepresentation—

Mr. Trotter: I am taking this from the Social Planning Council of the city of Toronto. This is what the official—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There are 3,000 on the waiting list.

Mr. Trotter: The Social Planning Council of the city of Toronto tells me this, and I have it in front of me, that there is a list of 12,000 families waiting here in the city of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, this does not affect the truth.

Mr. Trotter: The Social Planning Council continues, and incidentally I think a good Tory is the top man of the Social Planning Council here in the city of Toronto. Experts here, again from the Social Planning Council, estimate that 30,000 to 40,000 units of public housing are needed in Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, that is just nonsense.

Mr. Trotter: Well, the hon. Minister might think it is nonsense, but it is time that he got up to date. He was talking in terms of 200, after 20 years, and these people who spend their lives in this type of work tell us differently. I would like to put forward some of the facts that have been garnered by people who have been spending their lives in this type of work.

I represent a Toronto area, and I would like the hon. Minister to hear what Toronto people have to say. The Metropolitan Toronto Interim Housing Committee recommended a construction programme of a thousand units per year for a period of five years beginning in 1958. Since that time, less than 100 units of housing have been added in Metropolitan Toronto; but in 1961 steps were taken to add over 800 units by the end of 1962. It can be seen that they are plodding bit by bit, and for the hon. Minister to get up and talk about 200 units a year in this city, when we need literally between 30,000 to 40,000 his programme is obviously away out of date.

The city of Toronto had attempted to put in a programme to renovate and to augment the supply of low-rental housing for public control. In order to do that, Mr. Chairman, they had to come to this Legislature before the private bills committee, to get the legislation. So they came to the Legislature, and their recommendation was to acquire suitable older properties for renovation in order to augment the supply of low-rental housing, something in the line of this legislation that the province says that they are now going to bring in. I hope the government does it; and I hope they are going to make an effort in this regard; but certainly, after this length of time, they are long overdue to do something.

This is what happened when the city of Toronto suggested to this Legislature that they be given such power. The city of Toronto prepared a draft bill. It was brought to the Ontario Legislature in February of 1961, and a delegation representing the committee on housing—and, incidentally, the Riverdale East Toronto Housing Group, I believe, comes from the hon. Minister's own riding, and they certainly took an interest in this—came before the Legislature, as well as the Central Toronto Housing Group. They appeared at a private bills committee in the Legislature in support of the city's application. But even this government, at that time, was not too impressed with what the city wanted to do. This was just in February of 1961, and the bill submitted by the city of Toronto asked for wide powers for the local corporation. The city proposal was amended; the Legislature did not want to give the city too much power in regard to rental housing, so the city proposal was amended to limit the use of this housing for families or persons who may be in need of public assistance.

The city of Toronto has not had the funds in the past year to appropriate in their budget for more rental housing. Certainly they need help from the province. I bring this to mind, Mr. Chairman, because as of February, 1961, the city of Toronto was getting very little encouragement from this government to acquire suitable older properties to be used for rental housing.

I just wanted to make a few remarks regarding the use of rental housing and the limited dividend corporation. All these things can be helpful, but neither one of them in itself will help solve the housing situation. Certainly we in the city of Toronto have seen a tremendous growth in apartments and in rental buildings. Most of the buildings that have gone up, of course, have been for the middle income groups. They are apartments that rent from $110 to $130 per month, and we can see that this is not going to help those people who are in most need of housing, certainly in the low income group.

Again I repeat that the Social Planning Council advises a group of between 30,000 to 40,000 families that need help. The limited dividend company which is assisted—I believe it is under section 16 of The National Housing Act, where the federal government will provide the long-term interest mortgage funds—does help in some respects, but it still requires a large capital outlay for limited dividend construction. The capital is provided by private enterprise. Here in Toronto, over 77,000 units of limited dividend housing have been built and, as I said, mainly by private enterprise; certainly nothing to do with this government. The opportunity has been lying there waiting for this government to do something over a very long period of time.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that some limitations and problems are presented by limited dividend housing. It does some good, and probably the provincial government intends to use this system, but there are three problems that it does not solve. The limited dividend housing can provide dwelling units for only a limited group of people. They are the people who, at best, are the highest of the low income groups so that it is, again, not reaching the people that most need it. Limited dividend housing cannot meet the needs of the larger families with low incomes; what we certainly need here, in this city, is the type of dwelling unit where the large families can find housing. The present set-up they have for limited dividend housing does not help the large families.

I make this one suggestion: if the provincial government does intend to use the limited dividend corporation let it make a change in housing construction. Try to make arrangements with the federal government, so that provision can be made for families that have a large number of children. Certainly under the present legislation these people are not helped under the limited dividend scheme. The third weakness of limited dividend housing is that high land costs require that most of this type of project be built in the outer suburbs where there are high densities of population; land here in Toronto is so expensive that they try to get as high buildings as possible. That is, I think, one of the weaknesses in the Regent Park system. In some cases the buildings are too high, there are too many families compressed in a small area. This is the result of the high cost of land.

So, with these three weaknesses in the limited dividend project, I suggest that it is public housing, subsidized rental housing, that is going to be needed for that area of people; and I again point out there is such a pressing need here in this area.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the one thing that has not been suggested, that I think could be considered, is a comparison could be made with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This federal corporation provides the greater percentage on a first mortgage of the funds necessary for a new home. In an area like the hon. Minister's area of Riverdale, or my area of Parkdale, there are many older homes. People have a difficult time trying to finance these homes. They can obtain a first mortgage, but so often a second mortgage is needed. And the great weakness with the second mortgages is that people find themselves in the hands of loan sharks.

They can take out a second mortgage, keep up the payments faithfully for five years and then, at the end of the five years, in order to renew it, they must pay a bonus of about 20 per cent of what is owing. They never get out of debt. What this provincial government could provide are funds where second mortgages could be made available on older homes at low interest rates, at around 6 per cent. Certainly this would be a great help in making it possible for people to buy and own their own homes without getting into the hands of loan sharks.

So I would ask the provincial government to consider the use of provincial funds to help those people to purchase good housing—such as with telephones, in Riverdale and Parkdale—by the use of second mortgages.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say, in relation to the statements that the hon. member has made, that he inferred that the 200 homes that will be provided through the rent certificate scheme was the total amount which would be made available through the housing branch this year. I am sure he did not intend that. So that the record shall be accurate, I thought he would like to know that we expect there will be 38 at Lawrence Heights, 155 at Scarlett Woods, 400 on Warden Avenue, 350 at O'Connor Drive, 1100 at Thistletown. The rent certificate scheme will produce about 200; we are providing by vote 306, item 8, $500,000, which is a quarter of the total appropriation and which may well run into 500 homes; 900 are being planned at Moss Park. The possibility is that this year, through the housing branch, we will have created more housing opportunities than the whole of Canada has in 20 years, outside of the province of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the point that I wanted to raise has become rather sadly detached now because it has reference to one remark that the hon. Minister made in his efforts about ten minutes ago, or was it a half hour ago? In the course of it, he said that he was seeking the application of new ideas, new experiments. For this I commend him. I am not going to debate with him the argument that what we want to do is follow a doctrinaire approach; this is a little political sally that I think is worthy of being ignored.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member has already given it more attention—

Mr. MacDonald: However, in the course of his references to the need for renovating and rehabilitating individual units to halt the spread of urban blight in certain areas, he suggested this is something which we are opposed to. I happen to have been fighting for this for quite some time. But when he made this comment, I noticed that, in his eager-beaver fashion, the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) pounded the desk and approved. Well, Mr. Chairman, my mind went back just 12 months when there came before the committee on private bills spokesmen for the Toronto housing authorities who were seeking to get permission to do precisely this—to be able to rehabilitate scattered units throughout the city of Toronto and bring them under the housing authority so that they could put people who needed low-rental housing in these scattered units instead of concentrating them in the fashion of Regent Park. And what happened, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Lawrence: This is going to go through Metro.

Mr. MacDonald: What happened, Mr. Chairman, was that the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) fought the proposal. He opposed it and said it must be restricted only to people who were on welfare, which was a completely unworkable proposition.

Mr. Lawrence: That not only is untrue, the hon. member knows it is untrue.

Mr. Trotter: February, 1961.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. And just let me complete the picture. This woman, whose name escapes me now, who was either the head or one of the key people in the housing authority, pleaded for an enlightened and progressive approach to this. But the hon. member for St. George was such a successful hatchet man that day that the proposal was killed by the rest of the Conservatives in the committee. I will give the government credit because, apparently, sufficient pressure was put on them that what the hon. member for St. George succeeded in killing, the government brought in through general legislation before the end of the session.

Mr. Lawrence: How many hatchet men have we got over here?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, when the hon. member for St. George is around they do not need many more because he does a pretty effective job. I just wanted to remind the House of this effort—a new idea being killed by one of the bright young men of the Tory party.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the hon. Minister is open for ideas. I presented an idea last year that I thought might be helpful in some of the downtown areas, particularly of Toronto. I was thinking also of my own riding. At that time, I do not think the previous Minister was as fertile soil for ideas, because he neither answered it nor paid any attention to what I was saying. So, in the hopes that I might have more fertile soil, I would like to read this from Hansard—it is a very short statement—and I am referring to the progress at Sacramento, California, where they have a scattered-type housing project.

I do not know if the hon. Minister had an opportunity to study that project, but I would say I think they have gone into some of this rental approach that he is doing, and I congratulate him on doing that. But, in connection with this scattered housing approach in the United States, they have about 10,000 of these projects. In other words, they take dilapidated houses in various downtown areas, take them over as a public housing unit. I will not bother reading this from Hansard, I will just summarize it.

In Sacramento they have found this really pays off because by developing the public housing units, building up old houses on a rundown street, they raise the value of the real estate on the whole street and the housing authority found there that the cost to the housing authority had been $1,200; and yet two years afterwards the value was $1,700. I think that one of the reasons for the great delay in the building of housing units in Toronto has been that we have always thought of enormous blocks. I frankly see some disadvantages in some of these large blocks.

Much as I can see the value of Regent Park, I often feel that the inhabitants there, grouped together because of economic circumstances, must feel like goldfish. I would suggest that having scattered units—buying, in other words, individual houses in run-down areas, and using these—might be a way, not only to hold back the deterioration of streets in Toronto, but also in fact, Mr. Chairman, to build them up.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I thank the hon. member. Would he tell me—I usually read, in the summer, the Hansard of the winter before. Would the hon. member give me the pages to which he is referring?

Mr. Thompson: I am delighted that the hon. Minister is asking for this: It is page 1731 of the Hansard for 1960-1961.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Thank you.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I was quite interested in what the previous speaker was saying, because we have taken advantage of the programme in the past offered by the federal government and provincial government—that is, the federal government paying 75 per cent, and the provincial government 17.5 per cent and the municipality 7.5 per cent on this housing programme of redevelopment. We are considering, at the present time, doing something exactly along the lines mentioned by the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson)—that is, taking a certain section of the city and having the people do some rehabilitation, or renovation to their homes, and I am just wondering, under this plan, that the province is inaugurating, whether some loans could be available.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There is a section in the estimates which relates to the lending of money, or the guaranteeing of loans. We will consider this, if the federal government will go along with us. We have proposed it to them and hon. members will see in legislation which I will introduce in the House that we are going to ask for permission of the House to enter into this kind of programme. We are now negotiating this with the federal government and I am hopeful that we can come up with something along the lines that the hon. member has outlined.

Mr. Belanger: Thanks very much.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, may I pursue this one step? This opportunity to lend money, or extend credit, will be for what type of housing? Will it be for subsidized housing, old homes, or could it be in conjunction with—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It could be for any of these things.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Any whatsoever?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Does the government propose to lend money on old homes? As the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) so effectively pointed out, there is a real need—members should be aware. I want honestly to say to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) that he has an interest in accomplishing the same fundamental goals that I have in mind for this programme. But sometimes what one might think at first, with some enthusiasm is a very good idea, sometimes can work out to be not as advantageous as one might feel.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As a matter of fact, there is a great problem of which the hon.

When the second mortgage programme began in 1948 or 1949, this was at first working to the distinct advantage of the buyer. It was not many months until it was obvious that it was working to the advantage of the manufacturer, the maker, the contractor. Knowing that the purchaser had this much more money and that there could be a mortgage made available, he was simply adding it on to the price. What happened in the long run was that we had to take over, sort of control, prices or rents. But what did happen was that CMHC came into the programme and they said in effect to us: if you get out of the second mortgage business we will advance an equal amount more on our first mortgage, but only if the contractor will agree to the end price at which he will sell the house. Hon. members can see, what they were trying to do was to make sure that the money they were advancing was going to the benefit of the purchaser and not to the contractor. That is one of the problems of putting mortgages—and I would ask the hon. members to consider this.

I say this with great sincerity, I have had, I think, the best people in the province of Ontario come here to help me, to advise me, with reference to this housing programme. This is one of the reasons I would like to establish a permanent housing advisory committee, because I think in all our interests it is a good thing in the long run. These people—and they come from all walks of life, people whom the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) and others know well—they say, in all sincerity, what we are concerned about is that if the government or anybody gets into a second mortgage or any kind of mortgage business on old houses, where there is a limited number, sooner or later it will be just like the second mortgage proposition we got into, in that there is not an endless number. Sooner or later, it is going to increase the demand for these houses, and ultimately, it is not going to help the purchaser.

Now, how many months that will take is difficult to say. But most people who in this province have devoted a lifetime to housing, their estimation is that if we were to get into this second mortgage business on old homes, that all we would end up doing would be to increase the sale price of old homes. The first few that might be sold, or for the first month or two, might be to the advantage of the purchaser. But in the long run, it would be simply a means of increasing the sale price, simply because it is not an expandable commodity. With new houses, it is a different thing, you can keep on building them. Old houses, there is a fixed number.

Right now there is a certain number of old houses and that is all there is going to be. Now this is their estimation, and I would want to say to the hon. member that we have looked at every idea in relation to housing, everything. We have had everybody in this city, from across this province, because I have a very sincere desire to do all that can possibly be done for these people. We have gone into most every conceivable proposal.

I have presented, through the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), a 12-point programme. I am hoping that during this year we can develop some of these. I have an idea, and I want to say this in all fairness, I have an idea that this rent certificate programme may be an entirely new approach towards housing. It may do away with a great deal of the very heavy capital investment and may, at the same time, help to an extent the housing industry, the persons who own homes, the people who are in areas where they do not want the area to break down into a sort of renewal area, or a redevelopment area, and so on.

I would say honestly to hon. members, though some fun has been had of me today about studying things, I honestly say that we have looked at this and we are going to continue to do so. If there is any way in which we can implement the ideas which the hon. members have put forward today, I assure them that we will do so, and I will not be chary in giving recognition where it belongs.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the hon. Minister, having had some little experience with this subject that he speaks of, that I am somewhat in disagreement with him that this would create the effect that he suggests it would create.

I think the situation today is entirely different from the situation in 1948. I would also suggest to him that such has not been the case in the United States of America, where they have had a system of guaranteeing loans for used homes for a number of years. This has not been the effect in the United States and I am aware of some organizations with some considerable experience in this matter of financing of homes which feel that granting mortgages on used homes would work to the distinct advantage of the purchaser. Particularly in the case of used homes, where the price is lower than that of the new homes. It means that a person with limited means is in a position to buy a home that they can finance and be able to pay for it within their lifetime. The situation as it exists now is such that the only place that one can get a maximum loan is in the purchase of a new home. In many cases this is forcing people to buy a home which is beyond their means; and yet this is the only way they can obtain maximum financing.

I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that had such a scheme been in effect for a few years prior to the present time, there probably would not have been the need for the mortgage legislation which was brought forward during the past year. I think this mortgage legislation was necessary simply because there was not adequate means of financing the older homes and as a result these people went to the high price money market to obtain the secondary money that they needed to buy a home within their means to acquire.

I think the hon. Minister should take another look at it. I do not know who his experts have been, but I do know many organizations composed of responsible people, who are knowledgeable in this field, who take the other side of the issue.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member I am happy to have his observations and if he would be kind enough in the morning to let me have a list of these people I would be very interested in getting in touch with them.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister if they have given some thought to a way to stop houses becoming overpriced as a result of using second mortgages on older homes. For example, Central Mortgage and Housing sets the price of a house; it cannot be over a certain amount—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is a new house.

Mr. Trotter: All right. I know that is a new house. Of course, that is the weakness with the Central Mortgage plan. With an older home there can certainly be income limitations before second mortgages are allowed; there can be limitations on the value or the price of the house. This is what Central Mortgage does with the newer homes. That is why I cannot agree with the hon. Minister's excuse why they do not use second mortgages for older homes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I said to the hon. member that I will look forward to receiving in the morning the list of people to whom the hon. member for Wentworth made reference; this matter is under study. This is the advice that I have had from people whose credentials, to me, seem rather important in this field; who have devoted their lives as public-spirited citizens. It may very well be that there is other evidence, and I would be happy to hear it.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I think there is one other field this government could get into, in the way of housing mortgages, and that is a provincially-incorporated organization along the lines of the federal organization, namely, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I do not know if the constitutionality of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has ever been tested in the courts—and I have my doubts if there is any authority under our constitution for such a body—but, nevertheless, I think all will agree that that organization is doing a good job. Here in Ontario I think we have special problems that are not in existence in the rest of the country.

As one, like the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), whose business involves mortgages and dealing with mortgages, every day of the week, I am sure he has noticed, and I know I have noticed, advertisements in periodicals, in Great Britain for instance, where there have been private organizations willing to loan, by way of first mortgages, up to 95 per cent of the market value of the property. In the United States, I have seen similar periodicals containing advertisements which have been on behalf of private organizations like insurance companies and trust companies, which have been willing to loan, by way of a first mortgage, up to 75 and 80 per cent of the market value of the property.

It may be that in this country we have not quite reached that stage; perhaps because of raw land available on the outskirts of the metropolitan areas in this country, we have not quite reached this stage. But I am wondering if the hon. Minister's department, and the officials therein, have yet looked into the possibility of incorporating an organization which would greatly increase the value or amount loaned on mortgages in relation to the value of a residential property. In other words, set up an Ontario mortgage corporation. I am not talking about the old Housing Corporation which dealt only with second mortgages; I am talking about a provincially-backed organization or incorporated company which would go in and provide mortgages up to 85 or 90 per cent of the market value of the property. In other words, start stealing some of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's thunder, but steal it on the provincial level and allow far more by way of a first mortgage on these properties, because I think this is needed in our crowded metropolitan urban areas in Ontario; and perhaps this is a need that is not felt across the rest of the country.

I think this is a provincial need, I think this is a provincial field, and while I feel a great many services now provided by the Ontario government should perhaps be taken over by the federal government, I think this is one endeavour and one field, where I am glad to encourage the hon. Minister in the pioneering work he is doing, and encourage him to go even further. Perhaps this further field should be an incorporated body whereby a government-backed organization would loan far more, as far as the percentage value of the market value of premises is concerned, than any similar private or public organization will now do.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): I am in the position of representing a company which has some 528 lots in one subdivision. I think there is an area that has not been explored; it might have been explored but has not been acted on yet, and several have touched on this particular problem. It appears to me that if NHA will provide 95 per cent of the cost of a new home, most of the people who go through the houses that I show in our area along the Niagara River will buy the new homes if they can sell their old homes. I do believe there is an area in which the government can work, where they can provide at least 85 or 90 per cent on the old home of an old established family who may sell that home for, let us say, $9,000 or $10,000.

If they can get their money out of that house—so many of the people say: "If I can sell my home, I'll immediately buy a new one." I think this area can be explored and well developed. I feel that many of the people who have old houses would like to move into new ones but they just have too much tied up in the old house and cannot get their money out. I believe if the government was to pick up this particular problem; enable the people to sell their homes and get all their money out, I could immediately, tomorrow, sell five or six new houses; and if I can, I will not be here to bother the hon. Minister for the next week.

Now, I built myself a home some three or four years ago before I was elected to this House—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is that a threat or a promise?

Mr. Bukator: I would threaten the hon. Minister with that if it would work. But I built myself a home three or four years ago, before I was elected to the Legislature, for some $18,000 or better, and I never realized that I had this government to thank for building me that home. Every year the government has displayed statistics here, where the province have had so many starts and have completed so many homes and I thought: using my grey matter and ingenuity, after all these years I had finally built myself a house. I did not know that I would have to come and thank this government.

Since I am on my feet here, I speak on behalf of all of those people who were in the same spot that I was, and say: thank you very much. But the government is going to be thanked again from this side of the House because we are a reasonable lot, believe it or not. We are going to thank it when it brings about the finances to help the man with the established home, the cheaper one, to build a home not only in my subdivision but throughout the whole province. This is an area that should be explored, and immediately that is done I will not show up for a whole week.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, that latest agreement between the federal government and the provincial government in regard to housing, does that refer only to housing in the cities of Toronto and Hamilton, as I judged from the papers, or is that fund available to housing authorities throughout the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I ask the hon. member—I really did not understand his question. He said some recent announcement by the federal government?

Mr. Troy: No, the announcement about the agreement in the capital disbursements here. Did not the province and the federal government make an agreement recently for provincial housing—a partnership agreement?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, no. Perhaps the hon. member is thinking of an occasion upon which Mr. Gathercole, Mr. Scott and I went to see the hon. federal Minister. At that time, we discussed with him and with the CMHC people our 12-point housing programme. A number of these housing programmes are under study and Mr. Scott, who has been back several times since then, has advised me that a number of these will have been accepted and be in operation by the first of April. We announced at that time a certain study that was to take place. We also said that we were hoping to establish with the federal government's concurrence, a housing authority, a company which would administer the new housing undertakings here in Metropolitan Toronto, but I—

Mr. Troy: Was there any mention of Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, there was no mention of Hamilton; not that there will not be, but there was no mention of Hamilton.

Mr. Troy: Hamilton was mentioned in the press.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Not yet, sir.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue the comments of the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) for just a moment, and ask the hon. Minister whether he had given any thought to the suggestions that were made by the hon. member for St. George. Now those same suggestions have been made by various hon. members of this House; I believe that the hon. Minister has himself, on occasions, referred to the possibility and, I am sure, in the last few months, given added thought to the advisability of either using the facility of a savings bond, which I think were suggested at one time, or even the provincial savings accounts; or, as the hon. member suggests, a new institution.

I must say that I find myself very much in agreement with the hon. member for St. George. It does seem to me that all one has to do is to realize that there are funds, people's deposits, that are available, providing the government is prepared to underwrite those deposits and assure their return at a specific time in the future. It could be directed for housing purposes.

In England they have done this through co-operatives; in the United States, through federal institutions. I personally believe that here in Ontario there is an ideal opportunity to tap this market and use it effectively and directly for first mortgages. I think that many of the shortcomings to which the hon. Minister has referred are particularly with reference to older homes; in conjunction with the newer homes and the more expensive homes, if you will, there is no real problem. The federal government is doing a job in that field and there is no great hardship.

The hardship certainly exists in respect to those people who cannot afford to buy a home under present circumstances, or persons who are prepared to buy an older home and just do not have anything like the full purchase price. In this area, which again is the great area of assistance, I think that we could use a new type of financial institution. I am not settled in my own mind that it should take the form of a savings bond, or a new incorporation, or the facility of the Provincial Savings Bank, but I would appreciate some further elaboration from the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I was just looking to see what vote this was under. We would be prepared to consider something. First of all, I would say that the suggestions are worthwhile. We came forward this year with a 12-point programme and this was as much—as far ahead really, with great respect—as any other province's department is able to digest, and I felt that this was all I would ask the Legislature in this session to authorize us to do; but we are asking for an amendment to The Housing Development Act to permit us to loan money or guarantee money loaned to persons like corporations authorized to loan money, if the money so loaned is to be used to acquire and rehabilitate existing housing units. This is a piece of legislation which will come before the Legislature. I think it is a matter of the Legislative Council having it prepared.

The guarantee does not require an item in the estimates; what we are doing under this programme is really new. It is like the rent certificate scheme, it is well in advance of anything that we have been able to find has been done elsewhere. I am hoping that if I introduce this legislation here, and if the federal government is prepared to go along with us, that we will, for the year, use our guarantee if that is available; and next year we will discuss this question of money in the estimates specifically, but may I assure the two hon. members that I am grateful to both of them for bringing it up. This is a very big field and it is really, without meaning to sound facetious—when I started out on this housing programme, I had 25 points in it. This group of people that I called together from around the province talked me out of some of my points. I was sad to see some of the points go; I would like to try some of them again. When I have a little more confidence in this field I would like to restudy them.

Vote 306 and vote 312 agreed to.

On vote 307:

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. In regard to United States Offices—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Excuse me, just a moment. I am sorry; is 312 carried with 306?

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a point of order. Where is the Ontario Northland Railway coming up? Is that under 312?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. Yesterday, I suggested that perhaps it might be useful to the House if we took 312 as capital disbursements; if we discussed the ONR after we had cleared vote 311 and just before we moved that the committee rise and report progress. Could we all write that down?

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question in regard to Item 5, United States Offices. I see where he is allotting $85,000 for expenses this year. Did Ontario have an office open in the United States this year?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We have had two offices open in the United States for some time, one in Chicago and one in New York.

Mr. Spence: How many industries were channelled through these offices last year, and established in the province of Ontario? And I would like to ask the hon. Minister another question. Have any publications come out of his office in regard to the work of these offices in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We will be delivering tonight, and also tomorrow, a number of publications that we produced. The most important one is in relation to fabrication gaps. These two American offices have two fundamental responsibilities. One is to assist our manufacturers in Ontario to sell their goods in the United States; and the second is to bring those manufacturers who are in the United States, or elsewhere—but we are talking about those two offices at the moment—and bring those manufacturers who are in the United States, who could well supply some of the market which we are not importing into Ontario here. I was asked about this particular point. In 1961, the industrial development division was in contact with over 1,500 companies regarding location in Ontario. Eight hundred of them were in the United States.

During the year, 113 manufacturing companies, employing over 10 on their staff or occupying a plant of over 5,000 square feet, established in Ontario as opposed to 113 in 1960. From the United States there were 55. We entered into a number of manufacturing agreements between manufacturers in the United States and those in Ontario, who were prepared to undertake manufacture on behalf of this particular product. We serviced over 700 Ontario manufacturers in this relation, that is to say, we talked to manufacturers, and interviewed them here, who were able to manufacture some kind of a product which we were importing from the United States. Approximately 200 companies sought to have their products made by an Ontario company, 119 of which were from the United States; and, as we say, we have serviced these and been in touch with them.

Our manufacturing arrangements bulletin—I am sorry, the pages have left and it is not possible to distribute them, but we will make sure that it is on your desks. We have a bulletin which goes to hundreds of companies in Ontario which says: we are importing these kind of goods, there is an opportunity here, are you interested in doing business here?

I would want honestly to say to the hon. member, that if I were to say to him that this specific box of soap came through the efforts of that specific man in Chicago or that specific man in New York, I could not say this. All I can say is that we have a great number of companies in Ontario, hundreds and hundreds of whom we interview each year. We have, and there are, a great number of American companies and we try to marry up these people and put them in touch with one another. In many cases it has produced new companies here, it has produced new exports there and this is about all I can say.

Mr. Spence: Does the hon. Minister anticipate in future to try to sell agricultural products in the United States under this new set-up that he has announced?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think I would want to make perfectly clear my position in relation to agricultural products, or for that matter any other products. I see it as my responsibility to try, in this province here and in our foreign markets and markets available to us, to make as many opportunities available as possible either to bring new industry here or to sell products. Now this may also mean that I work with the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) in relation to his tourist programme; or the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) in relation to his agricultural products.

I am asking the House in these estimates for permission for more money in relation to our offices in Chicago and New York. Whomever we send to Chicago and New York, we are going to try and carefully screen them to make sure that they have some commodity experience in both agricultural products and industrial products. In relation to agricultural products, I will really be at the assistance of the hon. Minister of Agriculture who will give me his instructions as to what it is that he wants carried out.

I feel that we have a service department. The hon. Minister in relation to the tourist industry tells me certain things that he would like done in connection with my department and we do the best we can to fulfill these. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and I have been discussing whether there should be additional representation at Ontario House or on the Continent with reference to agricultural products. This is a difficult thing to decide, because until a few weeks ago the European economy itself had not decided what its whole policy for the Inner Six was to be in relation to agriculture. But now that it looks to be settling down, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and I are working out between our staffs as to what we should do in this connection.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask another question of the hon. Minister. As he knows, towns and villages across this province certainly need an industry or two located in them. What consideration is the hon. Minister going to give under this new economic council—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What vote is this under; the regional developments? This is under this present vote of 307, item 4, grants to regional development associations, $105,000. What we try to do in this particular case is this: there are a number of regional development associations; they have their own staffs, they have their own general manager and his duty and their duty is to try, within their own field, to attract industries into their areas. Each municipality within the area makes a contribution towards the central treasury and we make a grant of either a matching amount or some other amount to these people. With this financial support then, they try to carry out their obligations in attracting industry into their area.

The Department of Economics and Development has a central responsibility of attracting industry into the province of Ontario. We have a special branch which is responsible for keeping all statistics of all of the municipalities. When some companies come into Ontario they say: first of all, we have these requisites, whatever they may be. We go over them and we give them the whole list of the number of municipalities that fit their requirements. Now, surprisingly enough, they do not all fit. Some of them insist on being in a big labour market, some of them insist on being out in the country, and so on.

But let me say this: our basic purpose is to be helpful. I think we have an attractive policy this year; I do not say for a moment that it is perfection. I think it can be improved greatly and I think it would have been better if we had even longer for organization of the department. But now that we have these things reorganized, our purpose is to bring as much industry here as we can, to sell as many commodities overseas as we can. Regardless of the jibing, in good nature, my hon. friends opposite have given me today, we are confident that in working with these development associations and the economic council we are going to be able to diversify industry in this province.

This is about all I can say to the hon. member. We do everything we can to make people in the United States and Europe and England aware of the opportunities here. We have a number of our staff who go and visit these people and we do just about everything we can to induce them to come here.

Mr. Spence: There is a great problem here with the towns and villages which need one small industry. I think great effort should be put forth by this new economic council to have them placed in these areas.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is right.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in this vote. We all know that the larger municipalities all have an industrial commission and that there is quite a race among the municipalities of the province to attract new industries in their own municipalities. However, I am wondering what assistance this department is lending to these industrial commissions.

I can put it both ways: whether they are working with or working against these industrial commissions in certain municipalities, when a certain municipality is trying to attract a certain industry to locate in their area. I recall in the past having been a member of a commission that had worked for a period of over three years trying to attract a certain industry to our locality; and then when we were almost on the verge of having this industry locate in our municipality some way or other the information did get out and the industry did not locate there, they went elsewhere.

I am wondering, because I do know that some municipalities, in order to attract the industries, subsidize anything they can possibly think of. To me, that is not something that should be done. I think there should be a law set up by the province saying that this is not a thing that one can do. After all, if we are going to work that way we certainly are going to have quite a chaos in the province. I want to know: actually what help does this department lend to these commissions?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There are two answers that I would offer to the hon. member. First of all, under vote No. 4, are the grants to regional development associations so these regions, which are unable to afford their own men to promote their interests, are able as a region to attract other industries and to compete—

Mr. Belanger: That is not the one in which I am interested.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Nevertheless, that is the first point. Then, second, we maintain a municipal industrial development service which assists municipalities to organize industrial commissions and hold industrial development seminars at the municipal level. Our purpose is to teach municipalities, to the extent that we can, how to attract industry and keep industry already established and to foster decentralization, to keep records on industrial land and buildings available for rent or purchase, to maintain up-to-date information on services and the municipalities generally in the province.

These statistics are available in our municipal industrial development service. If the hon. member is suggesting that there should be a law to stop one municipality from attracting an industry away from another, I do not really think that in a free enterprise country there is anything we can do about that. If an industry wanted to locate in one area, I would think that is the area to which it would go. If it went elsewhere, there is no doubt some compelling reason for it to go.

Mr. Belanger: No! I do not think the hon. Minister gets my point very clearly.

What I was stating was that: suppose, we will say—I have seen it—a municipality will say that they will grant an industry a concession of tax-free for a period of 10 years in order to attract an industry to their town. I feel that this is something that should not be done at all.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They cannot do it by the law of the province.

Mr. Belanger: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They cannot do it by the law of the province.

Mr. Belanger: I am wondering whether the hon. Minister is aware what is going on in the province.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member asked me the question as to whether municipalities should be able to offer incentives in relation to assessment and taxation and so forth. This is not an entitlement of theirs, but as far as whether it is being done, the hon. member might better—and I would ask him to do so—bring it up in the estimates of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass). This does not come within my jurisdiction.

Mr. Belanger: All right, I will do that, if that is the place to bring it up, I will certainly do that. But I happen to know of cases, that is for sure.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Read the law.

Mr. Belanger: The law might be there, but what goes on under the table is a different matter.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister another question and it is this: if a municipality has an industry that wants to locate there and they need the help of the department in order to give them certain figures and so forth, is the department willing to sacrifice its men to go down to the municipality for a period of, say, maybe two or three weeks to assist the municipality? Is it done at the cost of the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, it is. First of all, we have a number of people who are on the move all the time, they go from municipality to municipality all around the province. I do not know how many hundreds of municipalities Mr. Holland and his group would call on, and I do happen to have a couple of letters here from areas not far from the hon. member, from mayors of areas who have written to me recently to thank me very much for Mr. Holland, who is here on my left, coming with some people from the staff of the department to assist them.

Now if we are in the United States and we have a contact, if somebody wants to come here, our men in the United States, through the Chicago or the New York office, service the account on the American side and the information is made available. Our people will go anywhere and do anything to try and locate industry here in this province, anything within reason, or to find exports for our producers in this province.

Mr. Thompson: I was interested—I can appreciate the work and the dedication of Mr. Holland—but I was just trying to get some figures on a number of industries in Ontario. I think in the construction industry it is something like from 1,000 to 1,600 which would be interested in the export field. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am unable to tell the hon. member. I do not know, but—

Mr. Thompson: I would feel it would be almost an impossible task, unless the hon. Minister had a very large staff and I realize he likes to keep his staff to the minimum to cover all these industries and to inform them personally of opportunities.

Then there is always the danger that some people who might have wanted to know of an opportunity in some foreign market and have not heard of it may suggest that the hon. Minister's department was showing favouritism to some other group. I appreciate the sincerity of the staff to try to inform any industry in Ontario about the export opportunities.

When I asked a question before supper, I noted that the hon. Minister said he sends out these books—I am going back to this "fabrication gap"—and I would like to offer the suggestion that existing weekly newspapers covering this show the opportunities in the export field. I had one that I mentioned previously; I was reading it at supper. It points out that there is a market of $300 million apparently in some countries. Probably our people do not know about this. I would suggest the hon. Minister use these newspapers and encourage them to be read by the industries in Ontario, or else have a regular release to be sent out to industries in Ontario as well.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We have a regular monthly release. I am sorry, as I pointed out, our pages are not here and, therefore, I am unable to send it over to the hon. member. I would be happy to make it available tomorrow.

Mr. Thompson: Does this go to any industry that asks for it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, as well as those which are on the mailing list.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I noticed that there is quite an increase in the amount to U.S. offices. Is the department opening another office?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. What item is the hon. member under?

Mr. Troy: Under No. 5, the amount is $85,000. I noticed that last year—in the estimates of The Department of Commerce and Development.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The increase is $25,000 over last year for the two United States offices. The reason for this is $7,500 in terms of salaries, $5,500 in terms of allowances, apartment rent $2,100, moving expenses for one person, and for increase in travelling maintenance, and so on. The total amount is $25,000.

I anticipate that we will be placing—this involves the natural increment in the salaries of our stenographic staff in both offices—and I anticipate that we will be putting one additional person in the New York and Chicago office. The problems are many, of course, as hon. members realize. If a person is out on a call servicing industries and someone was to come to the office there would be no one to look after them, other than the secretary. This involved two people being there and for each one of these persons, of course, there are salaries and allowances because of the difference in the cost of living, and a number of adjustments. The addition is $25,000, allowing for additional secretarial staff and two additional people and a stepped-up programme.

Mr. Troy: I notice there seems to be quite a difference in living and representation allowance in Chicago. Your man there, Mr. Cooksley, was given $1,287, and Mr. Probyn in New York City $4,600 in the same service, apparently. Is there that much difference in living costs?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is because of the change of personnel half-way through the year. The hon. member is only looking at a half-year.

Mr. Troy: Was the Chicago man only there six months?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Holland tells me that there are two reasons for this. It was a half-year break, in addition to which there is a different allowance for a married man, who is the gentleman in Chicago, and an unmarried man, who is the gentleman in New York. It costs more money to be unmarried in New York than it does to be married in Chicago.

Mr. Bukator: The hon. Minister mentioned the regional development group. Am I in order to speak on that matter, pertaining to regional development?

Hon. members will recall about a year ago, as a matter of fact this time of night, I asked the then hon. Minister of Commerce and Development, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). At that time he promised that they would make a survey on the project that I was speaking about, which was Black Creek, bringing the water down from Lake Erie through Black Creek and helping many of the farmers, the tourist industry, the boating industry, and so on. He did promise me a survey. Now I might say to the hon. Minister—I am sorry the hon. Minister from Kingston is not here—they did have a survey last year and it looked like it might be feasible to develop this area for many purposes. Now—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I ask, was there a survey?

Mr. Bukator: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And the hon. member would like to have it?

Mr. Bukator: That is it exactly. I would like the results—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If there was a survey, the hon. member will have it.

Mr. Bukator: That is all I want. As a matter of fact, the only other thing I would ask at this time: if it is feasible, would they start the job? That is all I would ask for that area.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, in that I did not know there was a survey, I am not able to say whether they are able to whatever it is the hon. member asks me if they can do.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister: what is the grant going to be to the regional development associations this year?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: $15,000 for each association.

Mr. Troy: Thank you.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, did the department attempt to direct industries to set communities—I specifically refer to communities that might be economically depressed—and in the course of their discussion with industry on the American side, sort of attempt to sell one community over another?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would frankly say to the hon. member, who is an associate of the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Belanger) who asked me the same question a few moments ago, I said to him at that time: this is why there are regional development associations. Our basic responsibility is to introduce people from outside Ontario into Ontario; they tell us their specific requirements, and it is our responsibility to provide them with information through our municipal services. We tell them of the various municipalities which could fill the needs that they have.

We then put them in touch with the various regional development associations, and it is up to these development associations to compete with one another in relation to these matters. However, I will say to the hon. member who has asked these questions, that we have now under study, through the economic council, the question of an Ontario development fund. This is one way that we may even out development of secondary industries, and also tax incentives, all of which can be directed towards, as the hon. member would realize, the depressed areas and so forth. But as far as our present policy is concerned, our job is to bring industries to the Ontario border and to find market opportunities for those who are manufacturing in Ontario.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for the answer, but does the department attempt at all to impress upon industry desiring to locate into the province that certain areas suffer considerably from unemployment, and, as a result, should possibly be favoured over others?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, this really is not what one would call an item that could be put very high on our list of saleable qualifications. We do what we can to bring industry to this province. I do not know what more I can say than that. We do not point out that one municipality although not as well equipped as another, would like to have them more than somebody else, or needs them more. Our job is to point out, as we say, that Ontario is a good place in which to do business, and that these are the municipalities that can fill the bill.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to enlarge on the remarks of my colleague to the right (Mr. Newman) and to point out—and I am sure that the hon. Minister, if he has read the study by the United States Senate, the manpower study, he would recognize that they took an example in Pennsylvania, which is the depressed area, they took one of the towns there, Hazeltown. The coal-mining industry had been depleted, and there was stagnation on the part of the labour force.

They took a more comprehensive look than just suggesting: "Why does industry not come in here?" They told industry that there would be retraining of the unemployed men. There would be opportunities for sites for industry coming in. There would be houses provided and if industry would locate there, the retraining would be particularly for that industry. I think this is what my colleague to the right is suggesting. In other words, a more cohesive approach to this problem, and I would—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In spite of the fact that yesterday, the hon. member made some considerable light of the fact that I talked about retraining, saying that this was—at least one of the Opposition members did—that this properly belonged in some other department, and I was trying to become a czar. Is the hon. member now suggesting that I have some responsibility in this area?

Mr. Bukator: If he is a good czar, yes.

Mr. Thompson: I would hope that there would be a happy co-ordination amongst the hon. members of the Cabinet; sometimes I wonder about this.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I assure you I will not be long, but I want to say something about these regional development associations, because I have had a little bit to do with one of them. I am not going to be the least bit critical of the hon. Minister. He has told us that it has been a hard job to reorganize the department, and I certainly appreciate that; but when he gets a little more time I wish that he would look into these grants to regional development associations for this reason. I believe that the regional development associations were set up originally to attempt, to the best of the ability of this government and of the associations, to try legitimately to decentralize some of the industry in the province of Ontario into the rural parts and small towns of Ontario.

The point is that these municipalities, for example, in my own area of Bruce, or Grey, obviously work on very limited industrial budgets, and I would strongly suggest that, in order to make these development associations have real success, there should be more money put into the pot from the government level.

I am not one who goes and suggests that the government should give money away irresponsibly, but I sincerely suggest to the hon. Minister that this is one place where, when he has more time—probably when the session is over—he should look into the possibility of increasing the grants to development associations, because those fellows can really do a good job.

They are on home territory; and by advertising and by going out and putting on a strenuous effort, it is quite possible that they can get industry in their own locality which now they cannot do for one reason—that they cannot afford it. They cannot afford all the entertaining, and the labour, involved in getting industry into a small locality; and all of us know that entertainment and labour are very, very important, and they go hand-in-hand. I suggest to the hon. Minister that he look this situation over again when he has more time.

Now then, the next thing that I wanted to suggest to him. I am very glad to hear that he is putting an extra man in New York and in Chicago; and, with all due respect to the hon. Minister, I suggest that this still is not enough; but I know that if it is not enough he will put more there. I will only take one minute, but I want to quote from a speech from the industrial commissioner of the city of Brantford, dealing with this problem. It is very short and took place before the estimates of the hon. Minister came, so there is a little change. I quote from his speech:

In addition to the efforts of the various communities across the province, the Ontario government has The Department of Commerce and Development, which has a division known as the trade and industry branch whose function is to handle inquiries in relation with firms from the United States and Europe seeking to examine the Ontario market. The people from this branch are doing an excellent job but they are too few and far between. For instance, they maintain one man in New York and one man in Chicago, who have the monumental task of representing the leading industrial province of Canada in a country of 180 million people.

Now this is the area of "hard sell". What impact can two men have on this vast American industrial territory? I would strongly suggest that Ontario representation in this field is entirely inadequate and should be bolstered as rapidly as possible. In addition, the growing strength of America's industrial complex on the west coast should be recognized by the establishment of a province of Ontario industrial relations office in California. We must wake up to the simple fact that Quebec and other provinces are pushing and pushing hard in the race to grab the potential industrial firms seeking to locate in Canada. It is to be hoped that the new Minister of that department, the Honourable Robert Macaulay, will recognize these salient features.

I am quoting from the industrial commissioner for the city of Brantford, Mr. Mackenzie.

I think there is no criticism there whatsoever. But I strongly suggest to the hon. Minister that even two men are not enough. I know if he finds it necessary to have trained salesmen to sell our products in Chicago and New York, that if necessary the staff will go up to 10 or 12 men; and I would hope he takes the view, the forward-looking approach, in looking into the future in the next two or three years, that in order to sell a country like the United States we have to put men there—not just one or two or even half a dozen—and that they have to be real trained fellows to do the job.

Votes 307 and 308 agreed to.

On vote 309:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Which vote is the hon. member on?

An hon. member: Does the hon. member not have a home to go to?

Mr. Thompson: Well, for the sake of the people of Dovercourt and of Ontario, I deprive myself of my home. I was interested in the two immigration officers that the hon. Minister is appointing, two additional immigration officers. Are they to be attached to Ontario House? Is their area of work going to be in Great Britain?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member mentioned two immigration people, did he?

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, I thought the hon. Minister had mentioned that.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, I mentioned two; but I wondered whether those are the two that the hon. member mentioned. We have them here in the province of Ontario, with one additional person at Ontario House.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask the hon. Minister what is the purpose of the two in the province of Ontario? Are they going to be consulting with industry to see the kind of personnel needed? And as regards to the man in Ontario House, will he be looking further than Great Britain?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry; I did not hear what the hon. member said.

Mr. Thompson: Will the man in Ontario House be looking further than Great Britain to get this technical staff?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, this organization is basically for the UK, and the policy is not to supplant or replace the immigration policy generally of the federal government, because obviously that is their jurisdiction. This is as it affects the economic situation in the province.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, we moved along there pretty fast, and I know it is getting late, but on vote No. 308—I have had my eye on that one all evening and we went over it. I wonder if the hon. Minister could just tell us what the inter-governmental relation branch does?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It has a number of responsibilities: to study questions of federal-provincial relations including tax-sharing agreements, fiscal arrangements and related matters; to study the relationships between the province and the municipalities; and to undertake other duties that are in these areas.

I might just mention some of the things which have been under way and completed in the last year, since the hon. member has asked:

(1) Material was prepared for the plenary session of the federal-provincial conference held last February and for meetings of the federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters in February, March, April, September and November.

(2) General matters under study for these meetings included new fiscal arrangements to replace existing tax-sharing agreements which are due to expire March 31, 1962—new methods relating to taxation of companies engaged in logging operations and reciprocal arrangements regarding the application of taxes on Crown agencies.

(3) Several payments under existing tax-sharing arrangements were examined and analyzed—a similar examination in a prior year resulted in an additional payment to the province of Ontario of more than $1.2 million with respect to the rental of the personal income tax field.

(4) Research was carried out on methods providing special grants to school boards for the benefit of residential and farm ratepayers.

(5) Special report on Metropolitan Toronto system of government was prepared for the special committee of the metropolitan council on metropolitan affairs.

(6) Water power rental agreements between the province, Hydro and Niagara Parks Commission were reviewed.

(7) The branch is studying, in collaboration with The Treasury Department a draft agreement with the federal government for the federal collection of Ontario personal income tax—and I have four pages here that relate to programmes that we now have under discussion.

Vote 309 agreed to.

On vote 310:

Mr. Thompson: Under 310, I raised the question about the $9 million—I apologize, I had said $19 million—research institute or research centre. I am curious about this from the point of view of administration. I can understand that research is really the exchange of ideas, and yet there is a need for equipment in order to develop these ideas. But I am wondering about spending this large amount of money on a research centre in one area. The hon. Minister had mentioned that the reason for having it, I think, near Toronto was because there was a lot of industry here. I wonder why DuPont, for example, are doing their research in Kingston; there is research in Sarnia on petroleum; and there is also automobile research in Oakville. It seems to me that some industries—I think the hon. Minister grasps the point I am making.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does the hon. member want the answer?

Mr. Thompson: Well, I would just like to ask another question. How does the hon. Minister decide what industry will get priority in research—that is part of my first question, I think.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, firstly, answering the hon. member's questions in reverse order, how does one decide what industries obtain what order of priority in the research of the Ontario Research Foundation? I would say that all industries pay the cost of the research at the research foundation and it therefore depends on what arrangements they work out in the Ontario Research Foundation. It is just a question of how much they can handle all at one time. In short, the Ontario Research Foundation is more than two-thirds industry supported, employed and financed.

The other portion of it is in relation to the provincial government for specific undertakings that we finance, that we think are in the interests of the province to develop, for example, new products, new techniques, to help industries which may otherwise be facing difficulties due to technological changes and so forth. Their second job, in relation to us, is to give or to act as a committee for the granting of university research and post-graduate science and engineering scholarships which we grant in the extent of $275,000. Now the breakdown of the million dollars which I am asking for is: administration, research, review and advisory committee—$32,000; northern Ontario development and foundation research, special services and projects and energy sources for jet smelting—$693,000; and I can give him the number of studies that that includes; and then we asked the Ontario Research Foundation to distribute some $275,000 for research in post-graduate science and engineering scholarships in areas which they have selected which they think are productive in original research.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask another question with respect to this? Previously the hon. Minister had mentioned 11 per cent of the 50 per cent corporation tax and that this does have an influence on industry. I had wondered if he had thought of encouraging independent research by corporations to which he might give some tax incentive.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, could I mention to the hon. member the first question he asked in relation to this $9 million? At the present time, the Ontario Research Foundation is on Queen's Park Crescent, in two or three buildings, and it is quite pressed for space; there is a necessity for it to move elsewhere to house its equipment and to carry on its expanded obligations. Therefore the question embraces a new concept, an entirely new concept for it to go where there is some space around it and where it can centre itself as a nucleus; and industries can come in and locate all around it. This is why I described it as a satellite community.

There are four or five large industries which have indicated a great interest in doing this, and co-operating. There can be an exchange of technicians, and of engineers, and of research, and of information, and of saving in equipment and, therefore, we would have, in effect, a heart in the centre which is the Ontario Research Foundation and around the edge would be a number of companies, the names of which I cannot mention at the moment, but I hope to have something of a substantial nature to indicate to the House in time.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I note that this vote was a little bit abrupt, because I note that with the advisory committee—and I think we tossed those words around earlier in the evening to some extent—I wonder if the hon. Minister would name the advisory committee whom this $32,000 pays and the personnel there.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I can name it. As a matter of fact it is a board of directors. Actually, the $32,000 does not go to the advisory committee, so let us get this clear right off the bat. We pay $32,000 to the Ontario Research Foundation as our contribution to a $3 million or $4 million total budget.

We feel we involve them in the distribution of the $275,000 worth of scholarships and also in handling the $693,000 worth of specific undertakings that we ask them to carry out. In short, this is $32,000 that we pay to their overhead. On the board are people like Mr. Twaits, head of Imperial Oil; I do not know whether Mr. Sale is on it, but there are a large group of industrialists. Dr. Tupper is the chairman of the board. I would be happy to send the hon. member a list.

These people are not salaried. The name advisory committee just happens to be a phrase. These people serve without remuneration whatsoever. The advisory committee's purpose is to do two things: one, to sit at their own expense and on their own time to decide how this $275,000 should be divided up among people doing original research. Secondly, to delineate the areas in which we should operate in connection with the $693,000, also to support original research.

Mr. Whicher: Is this the committee that the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) set up last fall?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, this is the board of directors of the Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, would a graduate student in nuclear physics, who is at the university now taking his MA and hopes to go to Oxford or Cambridge or some British university to continue experiments in nuclear physics, be eligible for one of these scholarships? To whom would he apply: to The Department of Economics and Development, or to the research foundation, or to the university?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Frankly, I cannot tell the hon. member whether he would be eligible or not. But a way he can find out very quickly would be to apply to Dr. Misner who is the director of the Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to table, if I might, the annual report of the Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, one question before we leave this section. I have been waiting for some time, like one of the hon. members referring to one of the other sections. When we were talking about the research organization in The Department of Agriculture which is to be set up, there is provision made in that legislation to allow the department to charge for certain discoveries that they may make that would be marketable.

The connection with this is as follows: I understand that basic research is done at the universities, but practical work on industrial problems, provided from Ontario industry, is done on Queen's Park Crescent and at this new establishment. The industries concerned pay the cost of this research, but suppose some development comes from the work of the Ontario Research Foundation that is patentable. Is there legislation that would enable one to patent this and to collect money on the use of the patent?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: My recollection on this is that the patents on work which is done by the Ontario Research Foundation for company "X", and fully paid for by company "X", belong to company "X". Where research is done by the Ontario Research Foundation under these general grants the patents are "res publici". I am sorry that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) is not here.

Mr. Whicher: I do not know what the hon. Minister means by "res publici".

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They are in the public interest. They would belong to the research foundation for the general public.

Vote 310 agreed to.

On vote 311:

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, before 312 is passed, I would hope that the hon. members of the House, would certainly want some further exposition of that very vivid description which we had a couple of years ago from the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Auld) on the far-reaching programme of back-breeding. I wonder if he could tell us more about how the development of that programme has continued.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Actually, back-breeding comes under the next vote.

Mr. Trotter: On 311, Mr. Chairman, there is an item 2, the operation of park and historic sites. Just what does that cover, because The Department of Travel and Publicity is supposed to be looking after parks and historic sites, at least looking after historic sites?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, that is not correct. The Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission is a commission which was established to create and develop this particularly historic area of the province of Ontario and has nothing to do with The Department of Travel and Publicity. Under the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission comes Fort Henry at Kingston and the parks not too far from Cornwall; which is not perhaps the way the hon. member would want it referred to, but some distance from Cornwall.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that it would be more reasonable that this section, $954,000 covering parks and historic sites, should be in either the parks department or Lands and Forests. Why would they put it in this department?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I think the answer to the question is that on the select committee we have been wrestling with this problem for two years and we are one day going to bring in a recommendation as to where it should all—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: When hon. members do, that will be time enough perhaps to—

Vote 311 agreed to.

Mr. Troy: Under the ONR clause, or whatever it is—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I just say—while I have these in my hand—that there has been some considerable interest, discussion and inaccurate reference, in and by and around, through and under and over the press, about the Moosonee harbour investigation basic field survey in 1960, and I would like to table these things.

Mr. Troy: Early in this session I asked questions in regard to certain matters about the Ontario Northland Railway. They have been in the hands of the hon. Minister, or the appropriate hon. Minister in any event, for many weeks. I wonder if the hon. Minister at this point is able to—I know he is able to—but will he answer those questions first?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What were the questions?

Mr. Troy: The first one is—I will read it to him—have there been or are there now any former employees of the Ontario Northland Railway who after retirement on superannuation are being kept on or were kept on in an advisory capacity?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If these questions are on the order paper I will answer them as questions on the order paper only.

Mr. Troy: Only?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: While the hon. member is speaking, I will go on looking and see what I can give him off the bat.

Mr. Troy: I understand that in connection with the new development of northern Ontario the communications system is being expanded, particularly because of certain conditions that prevail in the city of North Bay and also that have to do with the defence of this country. One would think it was improving the general telephone system, or communications system, of northern Ontario. I would like to know: first of all, in one of the projects in connection with the communications, there was a tender called, the tender number was ONC59—I think it was—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It does not matter, it deals with air-cooled and water-cooled generators, does it not?

Mr. Troy: Prime powered diesel is one; and standby propane and no-brake propane. It is in connection with the new communications system. A North Bay firm,

Inspiration Mining Limited based at North Bay—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: $26,937, is that the one? As opposed to—

Mr. Troy: Yes, one was $36,907 for the first one, the prime powered diesel, tax included; the other was for the standby propane. The North Bay firm tendered $54,748, and no-brake propane complete $102,000. Altogether the North Bay firm's tender was approximately $184,000.

I understand that tender was let to the Quebec firm, Atlas Polar; and some firm co-operating with them, I think it is Russell Hipwell. Now, if there was a substantial difference in the tender price, it is only reasonable to expect that the contract would be let to the lowest bidder, even if it was an outside of the province firm. But if there was not too much of a spread, in view of the fact that Inspiration Mining is a firm operating in northern Ontario, then I think that a little leeway should have been given to the northern Ontario firm and the contract given to them.

What was the tender of the successful bidders?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The advice that I have and the information the hon. member has given I will have to look at more carefully, but the Russell-Hipwell Engine Company is not a Quebec company, they are from Owen Sound. The Atlas Polar Company Limited is from Toronto. The Inspiration Mining and Development Company from North Bay bid on air-cooled diesels, and the engineering staff decided it was more in the area of efficiency for operation, etc., to purchase a water-cooled diesel and they therefore bought through, as I understand it, Atlas Polar Company Limited of Toronto. They were the lowest acceptable bidders.

Mr. Troy: What was the bidding, the price?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The price that I have here is in relation to the power generators of $30,765.16.

Mr. Troy: Right, that is for the first one. What about the standby propane?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry, my notes do not indicate. Might I say I did not anticipate that particular point and I will have to look up the figures and send them to the hon. member.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. The northland transportation commission has tabled their report. How much promotion is planned for Moosonee and other tourist attractions? I understand the commission is operating boat lines. Are these boat lines paying? Are they going to continue?

I might say I understand the new iron ore mine is being brought into production; will the tonnage offset the decline in gold mining in the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry, I must say frankly that I did not catch the hon. member's question.

Mr. Spence: How much promotion is planned for Moosonee?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In dollars or activity?

Mr. Spence: What is the programme or the plan for the promotion of Moosonee?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is the hon. member reading a question someone else has posed for him?

Mr. Spence: Yes, but I would like to know myself. I have heard a lot about Moosonee in the last three or four years and I am certainly interested in it. It was a great thing one day. When it was announced here in the House, we were really going to have something.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The position in relation to Moosonee I think can be sized up in this way: firstly—I am sorry, there are a number of things I wanted to distribute tonight. For instance hon. members will find in reference to the quarterly published by the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission for March, that 121 homes are being shipped from Fort William for erection in Moosonee.

In relation to the development of the port itself, the report which I have tabled is now available. This gives some indication of the amount of earth, silt and so forth that will have to be moved if the port facilities are to be created. At this time we have a three-prong survey under way in relation to the Ontario Northland Railway, one of which will touch upon the economics of Moosonee as a port. After we have received that, then we will be in a position to know the further surveys with which we must proceed.

There are two or three problems related to it. There is one as to whether Moosonee is capable of being turned into a sea port. A great many people have felt that this was possible; a great many people with much justification, not one the least of which was Colonel Reynolds, the chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway. On the other hand, there have been some who have derogated this and who have made derisive remarks about any effort to develop a northern outlet at Moosonee. Now, I am sure that none of our hon. members opposite fall into that category, but, nevertheless, there have been some.

There is a great deal of activity in relation to Moosonee. For example, the Hudson's Bay Company—and they have been in the business for 300 years in the north and have some knowledge of what is going on there—are developing and building at the moment a large tug and two self-propelled barges to operate in the harbour of Moosonee. They have some faith in this.

At the moment, I think I could sum up the general situation by saying to the hon. member that there is the possibility of bringing iron ore to Moosonee and smelting it and bringing it south. There are all kinds of other opportunities in relation to clay materials, to lumber, timber and so forth. At the present time, we have a survey underway from which, when it is completed, we will know whence we will go forward. That is about all I can say. I have tabled this report which is now available.

Mr. Spence: What is the hon. Minister's stand on Moosonee?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: My stand is that I have great faith in the development of the north. If Moosonee proves to be an economically sound project, we will go ahead with it. This is in line with what I said before.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, in regard to the boat lines that have to be operated by the commission. Are they paying? Are they going to continue?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, the boat lines actually are not operating at a profit. They are operating at a loss of about $37,000, as I recall. I am interested in this; the hon. member who wrote the questions for the hon. member who is now asking them, said that—

Several hon. members: Oh, no!

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now this is perfectly fair. I know who wrote the questions for the hon. member, and one of his attacks on us was the question that we were not allowing the Ontario Northland Railway to carry out its fundamental purpose. Then he just leaves it at that, and starts making fun about the railway because it is not operating at a profit.

In fact, the same hon. member wrote a letter to a newspaper and I am sorry he is not here.

An hon. member: Who was it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha). The hon. member has indicated that he is asking somebody else's questions, can he tell us who it is?

Mr. Whicher: He wrote his own questions.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The boats are operating at a small loss at the moment. The fundamental purpose of the Ontario Northland Railway, as the hon. members I am sure realize, is for development. This government takes this position, that so long as the railway and its boats and its automobile transport systems are operated at the best efficiency that man can produce, whether it loses money or not, is not important to us. What is important is: does it bring development? If it does bring development, that is what we stand for.

Mr. Spence: Might I ask the hon. Minister if they are going to continue the boat lines? This was not answered.

Mr. Troy: There are several boat lines. I know of several that operate on Lake Nipissing—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Operate what on Lake Nipissing?

Mr. Troy: Why was the hon. Minister not listening? He would have found out.

There is in the city of Toronto, at the present time, a sportsman's show. I understand on Monday, the opening day, over 50,000 people were there. If hon. members go down to the sportsman's show to find out something about the Ontario Northland Railway, of the services offered for the tourists, to find out if it has boat services and other facilities, what they have to do is ask some girl and she takes name and number and says: we will send you a letter. Now I suggest to the hon. Minister that he tell this advisory committee—I guess he is allowed to speak to them and give them some advice, as they can give him advice—he tell his advisory committee that they should suggest to whichever department—Economics, Development, or whatever it is—that they see to it that there is, when the most important sportsman's show in Canada is in operation in the great city of Toronto, somebody from the ONR publicizing that particular railway.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I was $4,000 out. The deficit for 1961 was $39,000.

Mr. Spence: Are they going to continue the boat lines?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say that the boat lines are part of the survey that is being undertaken at the moment and there is not much point in talking about a future programme before the surveys are available. I would say that I see nothing to indicate in the future that we would be discontinuing this service.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister said quite forcefully to the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence) who was seeking information, I think legitimately, that the ONR was for development. Why, then, has the government not considered the policy of subsidizing the railroad so that, as the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Hoffman) has pointed out, and as has been pointed out by other members for northern Ontario on other occasions, there are a number of industries, particularly the industry of beef-growing, that could be developed through better forage. Fertilizer is needed there. It is so expensive to get it by railway.

One can do all sorts of things. If one looks at the various cars of the Ontario Northland, one sees blazoned there "northern Ontario's development road". The hon. Minister said a moment ago that that is what the railway was there for. I hope then that there will be a change of scene. I know that we had at one time—I am talking about the boats that my hon. friend from Kent East (Mr. Spence) has discussed—a great promotion of boat service on Temagami. There was a great dream of developing that area as a summer paradise. It is a wonderful place but apparently the director, or whoever it was, of the promotion for some reason or other got sour on that particular project and he went north to Moosonee. It seems to me, too, that for many years to come—I think we should wait because in a very short time, perhaps in the next 20 years—we will have ocean-going submarines that will, with a little bit of uranium about the size of an ice-cube which will last for ever, operate all seasons of the year.

They do not have to wait because the Hudson Bay Straits are only open 2.5 months. In any event, why should they ship ore all the way down from Moosonee—the mills are in the United States—all the way by rail, when they could stockpile it on the Belcher Islands and take it out by boat in a navigation season? But I am not here to discuss Moosonee, I am interested—

An hon. member: Ask him about the diamonds.

Mr. Troy: Yes, I understand that there are diamonds up around there and of course they say there is fools' gold up there too. However, I am very much interested in this announcement in regard to the private enterprise, the firm of Jones and Laughlin from Pittsburgh, who are going to establish a mine at Boston Creek. I know, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) said when he was in North Bay, that that will mean a great number of extra trains on that line. I also know that it is going to mean that there will have to be a lot of work done on the old coal cars that have been out in the open for many years. I do not know if they are going to be in shape, with the bearings that they have or whether, running all the way from Boston Creek down to Pittsburgh, they will stand the run. I also wonder if it will be necessary to double-track that line, because with the regular traffic coming down—the lengthy paper trains, the passenger trains—will it be necessary to double-track the line?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, it will not.

Mr. Troy: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Simply because we are timing—and this is something that is relative in all fields of life—with adequate timing, it is not necessary to double-track the system.

Mr. Troy: But with the diesel power that the ONR have—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Do not argue with me about it, my hon. friend. The engineers say that it is not necessary to double-track the system. Now, does the hon. member want to stand here and—

Mr. Troy: I did not say the system. I—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The line south to North Bay—it will not be necessary to double-track the system.

Mr. Troy: All right. What about these employees that were laid off? Will they be the ones to get the first chance to go back into the shops where all the old coal cars are being repaired?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They will, of course, be the first to come back.

Mr. Troy: The first to come back? Has the hon. Minister found the answer yet?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: To what question?

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister said he was going to look for—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh no. If the hon. member will ask the questions on the order paper, I will answer them as they are on the order paper.

Mr. Troy: All right. Is the hon. Minister yet prepared to say that with this great new programme, this dynamic development of northern Ontario, that he is going to reorganize the commission? I understand that the present chairman—I do not know whether he is still chairman or not—is not well; he is in the south for his health. And the others—one of them is quite old. He is older than some of the people in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is the hon. member finished now?

Mr. Troy: Well, I will be quiet if I have to.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member does not have to, if he wants to go on. As far as reorganization of the commission is concerned, I would say that we have—as I said in these three surveys, all of which will be available to us in a matter of weeks, one of which deals with personnel and the commission and so forth—an opportunity to consider the existing arrangements; and if at that time it seems wise that there be some adjustment in this connection it will be made.

Mr. Whicher: I know the hour is getting late and everybody wants to get home, but there are just one or two remarks that I want to make in connection with Moosonee. The hon. Minister seems to take the attitude that when we ask questions about—and I am giving the example of—Moosonee, that we are doing it strictly to put in time, that we are not really interested in it, and things of that nature. I want to impress this on you, Mr. Chairman, that you cannot blame us in the Opposition for being a little bit sceptical about an area such as Moosonee.

I am going to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I heard the former hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost) stand over there, three or four years ago, and promise to the people who live in Moosonee and in northern Ontario that there was a sum of $5 million to be spent for the development of that port.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that did not take place. I want you to know that all of us on this side of the House are as keen for the development of the north as you are and we wish the new hon. Minister of Economics and Development every possible success in his endeavours, but at the same time you cannot expect us to sit down here and passively accept the words of the new hon. Minister of Economics and Development when he says that he is for the development of the north.

What we go on are the actions of the past. We were very interested of course in the dreams of the hon. Minister for the future, but when we think about the actions of this government in the past, in promising to us in the Opposition and to all of the people of the province, the sum of $5 million for Moosonee, it was nothing but a fairy tale.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the new hon. Minister of Economics and Development, I was the one who called him an economics czar the other day, and I will certainly do it again. But he must remember that in that speech of mine I also wished him 100 per cent success.

If he has to be a czar and take over five or six of the Cabinet portfolios of the hon. men who are his colleagues and sitting around him, more power to him; the point is that we do wish him every bit of success. But his speech the other day and tonight and his speeches at the beginning of this session, have been nothing but dreams of the future, which we hope will be successful, and an indictment of the Tory government of the past 20 years.

Therefore we say to the hon. Minister, when he talks to us about Moosonee and the development of the north, come to us next year with a little bit of action and not just promises.

Mr. R. Brunelle (Cochrane North): Mr. Chairman, Moosonee is in my area and after all the doom and gloom from the hon. members of the Opposition, I would like to announce to this House a very important item bearing on Moosonee. At Moosonee in a few months time they will be able to eat some nice Arctic char. The federal government is going to establish a fish processing plant. I would like to read this letter from the hon.

Angus McLean, hon. federal Minister of Fisheries. It is dated March 8:

Dear Mr. Brunelle:

In reply to your letter of March 3, I am advised that The Department of Citizenship and Immigration has obtained a parcel of land at Moosonee in connection with its programme of encouraging the development of commercial fishing by Indians. I am therefore forwarding your letter to the hon. Ellen Fairclough for further comment.

Naturally, like yourself, I am extremely interested in instances such as this which have to do with the development of relatively unexploited fisheries. The inspection service of my department will be providing such assistance as may be required for white fish, Arctic char and other species from this operation in order to assure the consumer of a top quality product.

Yours sincerely,

Angus McLean.

Mr. Chairman, this is another instance of another industry which is being established. I live in that area and, I for one, will tell hon. members that my people are very optimistic. Along with what the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) has announced, at the present time there are air force personnel in the neighbourhood of around 500 and in a few months time, by this summer, we should have approximately 700 or 800 personnel of the air force. So with the air force personnel, the establishment of a fishery, with the existing activity, even at the moment we have, I would say, enough to go on. With the unlimited resources and with the other developments taking place, Mr. Chairman, I say that Moosonee is an area to which we can look with optimism. In a few years time, we will be congratulated for the steps we are taking now.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member, for whom I have a great deal of respect, this question: he said he is optimistic about the future. Is he pessimistic about the unkept promises of this government in the past as far as Moosonee is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Words only, words only! Let me state one thing and be perfectly fair about it. The hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, as he then was (Mr. Frost), said that we would undertake a survey, in joint arrangement with the federal government, which was likely to cost about $50,000. He said if this survey gave promise, the investment on development of a port at Moosonee, the future prospects for capital development in that area would entail expenditures in the neighbourhood of $5 million.

Mr. Whicher: Was there $5 million put in the budget of that year?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, there was not. But there was enough to carry out the survey and that is the undertaking that was made.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister never answered the last part of my question. The new iron ore mine tonnage, will it offset the decline in gold mining in the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would think that it will go a long way towards it.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister a question in regard to the other operation of the Ontario Northland Railway Commission. This Star transport, is the hon. Minister able to give the House some idea of the success of that operation? I know it is fairly successful.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, my recollection of the transport service—of the Star transport—is that there was something in the neighbourhood of $160,000 profit. Sorry, $210,000 profit.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, since the Star transport does not deliver between North Bay and, I think it is, Swastika, and since the Walter Little transport has the rights in that area and then from Kirkland Lake on through to Quebec, would the hon. Minister consider making a strong effort from his department, or instruct the Ontario Northland Railway Commission to make a strong effort, to buy out the Walter Little people? I understand that if the price is right, they are willing to sell. Then we would have the possibility of marshalling yards in the city of North Bay and could combine the two services, the Walter Little service from North Bay to Kirkland Lake and all the points in between and then on up to the Quebec border, with the Ontario Northland Railway service to start transport from Swastika north to, I think it goes into, Kapuskasing. That particular facet of the operation of the commission is paying.

I would also like to know: has the site been procured yet for the new building that has to be built in Widdifield Township in connection with the communication development?

If so, from whom was it purchased and what was the price?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In relation to the first question the hon. member has asked me. I would be happy to take it under consideration. As far as the second question is concerned, I have the answer here somewhere. I have been unable to locate it in my papers and I will, therefore, be pleased to send it to the hon. member.

Mr. Troy: Thanks. I must assure not only the hon. Minister but this House that anybody who lives in the city of North Bay is definitely interested in the success of the Ontario northland as well as every other part of northern Ontario. If Moosonee is feasible, certainly we on this side of the House as well as—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, I have the answer here. It was owned by a Mr. Alec MacPherson.

Mr. Troy: And the price?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The price was $2,000 per acre, plus the cost of the survey.

Mr. Troy: How many acres were bought?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Forty acres.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of supply rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with the budget debate and some of the order paper—third readings and second readings.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wonder, before the House adjourns, I would ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) if the Ontario Northland Railway Commission will be before the committee on commissions as last year?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:50 o'clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, anticipating that the hon. members opposite would like the usual brief information concerning the introduction of a bill, I would state that this bill is aimed to provide the working tools to meet with the increase in the work of our courts at the county and district level particularly, I would say, in regard to some of the problems in the eastern Ontario section centring around Ottawa, and in this metropolitan centre and York centre as well as generally. The effect is that six additional county and district court judges are provided for to be judges-at-large. The bill also provides the authority to pay judges-at-large allowance for surrogate court work comparable to the allowance now paid by judges for specific counties and districts.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day I would like to draw to the attention of the House the great honour that has been brought to Ontario and Canada by Donald Jackson of Oshawa, who yesterday won for Canada the men's singles championship in the 1962 world figure-skating championships.

Mr. Jackson became the first Canadian to capture the men's title. He did it with an imaginative, brilliant, free-skating performance which won him the crown, and thrilled the huge crowd in the Prague's Fucik Hall.

Our very sincere congratulations are tendered to him at this time, in which I am sure all the hon. members of the House will join me.

We also have cause to rejoice in another victory.

Maria and Otto Jelinek, of Bronte, born in Prague but now part of the Canadian mosaic and way of life, won the world figure-skating pairs competition on Wednesday. This great win for them, I might say, came as they decided that it would be the last performance of their amateur career.

We voice our best wishes to them and extend hearty congratulations on their brilliant achievement and hope their future activities will be successful and rewarding.

I think it is most gratifying that Canada and Ontario should be so well represented at these world championship competitions, and that our entries should be giving such a good account of themselves in international competition.

Mr. L. Quilty (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to make this observation. This House will not be sitting tomorrow and tomorrow is St. Patrick's day, the day on which all Irish celebrate, and those who are not Irish join them. I may get an argument on this, but if I do I believe that my voice will back me up. I consider myself the most Irish member of this Legislature. I come from a long line of Quiltys, O'Hares, Dillons, and Murphys. My home is in Shamrock, seven miles from Mount St. Patrick. I had a brother and a sister born on St. Patrick's day—not twins. My two sons are Pat and Mike.

With this background I pay tribute to those of Irish descent and all those fine people who join us on this day to pay tribute to that greatest of all missionaries, who converted not a few pagans but an entire nation of pagans to Christianity.

To help me in this celebration I have as my guest a lovely Irish colleen and her Scottish mother, in the person of Miss Outdoor Girl of Canada and her mother.

Mr. Speaker, through the House it gives me great pleasure to present this fine young lady and her mother—Miss Isabel (for today) “O’Gould”, and Mrs. Gould.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like, as a good Scotsman—and of course you know what the Scots are, they are great people to keep the faith and everything else they can get their hands on—but I must compliment the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Quilty) and also our Irishman, the “O’Reilly” we think of so highly, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly).

But the reason I rose to mention this today was because last year I made the remark that it grieved my heart to go in and buy a shamrock at a store and find embroidered on it “Made in Japan”; this year I received a letter and this beautiful shamrock from the Catholic Women’s League, St. Lawrence O’Toole Parish Council, in the riding of my hon. friend from Renfrew South, and they say this:

Dear Mr. Wardrope:

Shortly after St. Patrick’s day last year I heard via the radio that you were very disappointed at not being able to find a shamrock for St. Patrick’s day. Our small CWL makes shamrocks every year to sell in our area for Paddy’s Day. So in case you find the same circumstances this year we would like you to wear one of our shamrocks with best wishes for a happy St. Patrick’s day.

Sincerely,

MRS. PAUL YAKABUSKI
President

That is a great combination of nationalities.

I might say that the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), sitting to my left, has also a very strong streak of Irish blood running through his veins.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Irish, just Irish.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I want to say this. Yesterday into my office came six Irish people from a mine in Ireland; they presented me with this and asked me if I would give it to our hon. Prime Minister who also has a strong streak of Irish blood in his veins. It says:

Genuine shamrock from the Emerald Isle flown to you, compliments of Irish International Airlines.

I would like to present that to the hon. Prime Minister, with their compliments, as being a good Irishman too. That is for you, sir, direct from Ireland, flown in yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, if I might just say a word. Mrs. Yakabuski is a very fine woman. I was up in the area not long ago, and Barry’s Bay I think is one of the finest parts of the province; but the woman who gave you this little shamrock is probably the only Tory in that town.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would permit me just a brief word. I want to join in the tribute of the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Quilty), partly because nobody has ever settled the argument as to whether the Irish are shipwrecked Scots or the Scots are shipwrecked Irish. But another reason why I want to join with him this morning is that he has brought us living proof of the fact that mothers of Irish colleens nowadays are Scottish.

Mr. L. Reilly (Eglinton): Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I was wondering on just what basis our hon. friend from Renfrew South (Mr. Quilty) was claiming to be the most Irish.

An hon. member: The hon. member is not even wearing a green tie.

Mr. Reilly: I may not be wearing one but may I assure the hon. member I do have one. And tomorrow is Irish day.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Sure and begorrahl

Mr. Reilly: Aye, sure and ’tis that. Mr. Speaker, the reason why I question his claim to being the most Irish is that I am a member of a family of 16 and happen to be No. 13 in that family of 16. I heard him today mention six or seven people; I question whether he could come up to the number I suggest—No. 13 for Irish day.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, before we leave this subject and after the procession we have witnessed, surely the representative for St. Patrick should join this procession. However, my calender says that St. Patrick's day is tomorrow, and I notice that perhaps it is premature or perhaps it is the funeral, but the one man who was born in Ireland seems to have some kind of a wreath or something on his desk; he himself is either laid out early or something!

All that I have to say today is before any of you gentlemen had finished shaving I was in St. Patrick station down here in the new subway addition and got off to a very good start. I did not bring my shillelagh, because I figured if anything was to be said about the Irish it should be said tomorrow, when I would use the shillelagh on anybody who particularly offended me and expect to get hit back. However, March 17 is still to come tomorrow, and before midnight tomorrow I am sure that it will be well celebrated.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the real Irishman is not here but I notice this beautiful plant from the ladies' luncheon club. The accompanying card says: "We dedicate it to Andy [hon. member for Dovercourt, Mr. Thompson] in memory of our great St. Patrick, and second, the good luck of the Irish"; and certainly an Irishman does not have to wait until St. Patrick's day to celebrate anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I did not plan on paying tribute to the Irish today because my forte, as the hon. members very well know, is St. Andrew's day. However, seeing as how there has been so much discussion about who has the most Irish, I invite the hon. members down to 55 Lakeshore Boulevard East.

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if I may bring the Irishmen and the would-be Irishmen back into the realm of reality, I would like before the orders of the day to make an announcement regarding a matter which will affect not only all hon. members of this House but all persons doing business with the Ontario government in Toronto. When the hon. members return to these buildings on Monday they will find a new telephone system in operation which will be the most modern available to us at this time.

By way of explanation I would say that, in effect, the government will have its own telephone exchange covering most of the telephones in the metropolitan area. It is a service called "Centrex" by the Bell Telephone Company and it enables a person calling in from outside to dial directly to the office of the person he is calling, instead of having the connection made by a switchboard operator. It is much the same as the change that has been made in most Ontario communities from manual operation to dial telephone.

In line with the Bell policy of instituting all number exchanges, the government telephones will have the prefix 365, easy to remember as the number of days in the year. This will be followed by a four-digit local. To reach my office a person outside the buildings will simply dial 365-1101. To call my office from inside the building a person would simply dial 1101. This new system we hope will take care of more than 75 per cent of telephone calls made into the government and there are some 15,000 calls made daily. For persons not knowing the number of the person they are calling, there will remain the EM 3-1211 general number. This will become known as 363-1211 and will be serviced by a staff of highly-skilled operators who are being specially trained to provide information service for callers.

These operators will also have more time to assist people calling into the government who are not quite sure what department or branch deals with the problem they are calling about. By now, hon. members will all have seen and, I trust, studied the new telephone directories which have been distributed. These will be replaced on at least an annual basis and I hope will prove to be more convenient and useful than the previous directory.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day there is a matter that I would like to draw to your attention. Mr. Speaker, this morning when we assembled, we found on our desks copies of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission report and the Ontario Research Foundation report, and the Ontario Northland Transportation report. Now I think we could anticipate certain literature yesterday as a result of what the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) told us, but I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that it does seem to me extraordinary that these particular reports, unlike economic reports generally, or compilations of statistical information, should be presented the day immediately following the consideration of the estimates. I will concede that many of these reports are complicated and take time and preparation, but it does seem to me that a little bit of foresight would have assured that these reports were made available to us prior to the time that these estimates were considered yesterday. It is more than coincidental that they should be ready the day immediately following.

Mr. Speaker, the point I rise on is simply this: we have had a lot of talk about the purpose of the Opposition, its functions and its operations. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I think there is genuine feeling on all sides of the House that we want to improve the operation of this House, and I point out to you that the Opposition has a purpose and a function and a real responsibility. It is not always a pleasant responsibility, but it is in our system a real one, and a purposeful one, and a meaningful one. In this respect I am not being personally critical at all, but I am saying objectively that this does not lead to the better performance of government of the province of Ontario, and certainly handicaps in a substantial way the facility and the operation of the Opposition.

With these reports in our hands three or four days ago, a more intelligent, knowledgeable and objective presentation could have been made by the Opposition; and I draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because this is not the first time it has happened. But I certainly hope that we can have your assurance that you will use your good offices to assure us that this is the last time it will happen.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): Well, Mr. Speaker, since I feel some responsibility in this matter, I would point out that this morning, on the hon. members' desks, there is no statement of the Ontario Northland Railway; that is not yet ready—what they have is a quarterly staff publication that is published.

Now the difficulty with these reports is that they are done to a large extent in relation to the chartered accountants who do the books of these various commissions. Some of these are large commissions and one of the problems of having these reports ready is just a question of timing, and staff, and getting these things done. Quite frankly, it was only yesterday or the night before, I think late, that I got the copies, in sufficient quantities, of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission and also of the Ontario Research Foundation reports.

I will, however, say to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) that I think that his point is quite well taken; it is desirable to have these things as far in advance as we can, but I want hon. members also, if they will, to take a look at some of these reports and realize how much work goes into the preparation of them. Nothing can be done until the books close at the end of the year, and that is, to a large extent, a matter of accounting. Hon. members will also note that the public accounts, for instance, for the year that has ended here in this province is not available yet. I would think that very few companies have yet reported their financial statements to the federal government on the year ended December 31, 1961. This is a great problem to handle.

However, I assure the hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman, that being in the department earlier—I came in in November, and it was impossible then to attend to all the things that I would like to have done—but I am hoping next year that I will have these available before my estimates come down. I think that the Ontario Northland Railway report will be very difficult to get ready in time. It may not be ready before the House rises this year.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to speak to this question for a moment. It has been a matter of consideration and discussion in previous years here in the House, and in the last three or four years there has been a concerted effort made by the various departments to get their annual reports out at least prior to budget time and I think the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) will agree with me, that the situation is a great deal better today than it was five years ago. The pressure is still on—if I may put it that way—to ensure that these reports are brought before the House and are in the hon. members' hands prior to the time the estimates are considered.

But I would also point out to you that there is a great deal of difficulty in time-tabling the affairs of the House in order that we may get the business of the province done, and that it is not always possible to hold up the estimates of any particular department awaiting the arrival of a report, which arrival might be somewhat indefinite. But even there we are attempting to time-table the estimates, in order that the greatest amount of information possible may be in the hands of all the hon. members before the estimates of any department are considered.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) a question on this? Would it be possible, when the hon. Ministers bring down their estimates, if all the information is not given to us at that time, that he tell us the situation so that we will know that it is either coming soon or will be on our desks; the actual information concerning all this, everything that is being developed for his particular department.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think it would be quite possible for an hon. Minister, if his most recent report is not available, to tell the hon. members when it would be available.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): I would just like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay). This publication, to whom does he send it? Where does it go?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I discussed this with the hon. member last night. That is a publication which is sent to Europe, England and the United States; and also areas of Ontario and other provinces of Canada.

Mr. Belanger: Does he send it to the industries of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We send it to people whom we think are interested. In effect it shows opportunities to do business here in Ontario. Our purpose is to send it to people in areas that we think will be interested in coming into Ontario to do business.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, as I desired to do last night and omitted so to do, the annual report of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question and I direct it to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts).

Is the hon. Prime Minister aware that Mr. Thomas Graham, whose appointment to the Ontario police commission was announced in the House by the hon. Prime Minister on March 13, was and may still be a director of Mexicana Explorations Ltd., an Ontario company?

Two: is the hon. Prime Minister aware that Mexicana Explorations Ltd. has been listed since June 27, 1960, by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission as a company whose securities the commission believes have been distributed in the United States in violation of The United States Securities Act?

Three: is the hon. Prime Minister aware that the secretary and a director of Mexicana Explorations Ltd. was, and may still be,

Mr. Lewis Herman, a Toronto barrister whom I identified in the House on November 29, 1961, as a solicitor for a great many chartered clubs which have been used for illegal gambling? Is he also aware that Mexicana Explorations Ltd. was financed by Mexicana Prospecting Syndicate, of which Mr. Louis Herman was the promoter?

Will the hon. Prime Minister inform the House who recommended Mr. Graham's appointment to the Ontario police commission?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that Mr. Graham was a director of Mexicana Explorations Limited, I am aware that this company was placed on a restrictive list by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission. I am aware that Mr. Louis Herman was a director and officer of this company and I am not aware of the full particulars of the financing of the company.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has made an obvious effort, in this question, to associate Mr. Graham with the allegations of crime made in this House by the hon. leader of the Opposition in his speech of November 29, 1961, to which he refers in the third question.

The questions, and the way that they are worded, are obviously designed to cast doubts upon Mr. Graham and his position on the Ontario police commission. Mr. Graham, a former member of this assembly, is unable to appear here and defend himself against this innuendo. However, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from Mr. Graham which will establish his position in this matter. I propose to read this letter and to table it.

Dear Mr. Robarts:

I was indeed pleased and honoured by my appointment to the newly formed Ontario police commission. I have indicated that I am prepared to give as much time as necessary to do all that I can to further the purposes of the commission. I am impelled by a desire to be of service to the public in this way, as I hope I have in other ways, in the past.

It is with deep regret that I have been informed of a question which the hon. leader of the Opposition indicated he wishes to ask you before the orders of the day.

I wish to give you the following information:

1. I have not been a director of Mexicana Explorations Limited since the latter part of 1960.

2. In October of 1956, Mr. Louis Herman, QC, who resides in York Centre riding, which at that time I represented in the provincial Legislature, and who had taken an active part in my election campaign, invited me to go on the directorate of Mexicana Explorations Limited, a company which had to do with a mining venture in Mexico.

3. It may be of interest to note that a part of the ground acquired by the company was formerly Cinco Mines, a silver mine in which not only the Spaniards many years ago, but much more recently the late John W. Gerard—one time American Ambassador to Germany—were interested. I was informed that introductions to the Mexican interests prior to the acquisition by the Mexicana Company were facilitated by two Cabinet ministers of the late St. Laurent government.

4. Before accepting the invitation to go on the board, I asked for and received assurance that everything was in order in connection with the company's organization and business methods.

5. I took no active part in the enterprise, but had confidence in the board, particularly by reason of the fact that on it were an hon. member of the federal Parliament and the sister of the then Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario.

6. The prospectus of the company was accepted for filing by the Ontario Securities Commission early in 1957 and was twice renewed, the last renewal being in February, 1960. It has not been further renewed and therefore has not been in primary distribution for some time.

7. There was never any extensive public distribution of shares. A number of those associated with the enterprise purchased substantial quantities to assist the financing of the company. I myself, however, never invested in the company, nor received anything from the company.

8. I am informed by the chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission that the company record is, and always has been, clear as far as the commission is concerned.

9. I understand that the company was, like a great many other Canadian companies, following a certain procedure adopted by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission, placed on a restricted list. This, I understand, is done without notice and does not necessarily mean that there has been any misdeemeanour.

10. As a matter of fact, in connection with this particular company, I resigned as soon as I learned that it had been put on a restricted list and actually I am informed that it has now been removed from the said list.

11. As far as Mr. Louis Herman is concerned, I never have had any reason to believe that he was anything but an honest person. I have never myself been a client of his or had any dealings with him either directly or indirectly, except in connection with the association mentioned above in relation to this company which ceased in 1960.

Yours truly,

Thomas J. Graham.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege. May I simply say that this explanation is quite valid and is the sort of thing that we would expect. But I must point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) suggested that I was trying by innuendo, I think he suggested, to associate—

An hon. member: If not, keep quiet.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I was not. Mr. Speaker, I am the leader of the Opposition, I have a responsibility to be here. In every other parliament there is an opportunity to make question. This question has been made and a good answer provided; that is all I am asking. We are an institution, we are an assembly, that is required to publicly make certain investigations and certain questions. I made it and I have a—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): But the hon. leader of the Opposition abused it—

Mr. Wintermeyer: I did not abuse it. I have an answer here and, Mr. Speaker, until we grow up and realize that there is a proper time and place to do this sort of thing, then this type of comment back and forth is going to persist. I for one want to rid this Legislature of that type of innuendo.

This was a legitimate question, it has received a legitimate answer and I accept it. But, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that all those interested in political life here recognize in the United States a specific facility is made to give an opportunity to the Opposition to make these questions at a specific time; here, this is the only opportunity we have. I exercised it in my official position, Mr. Speaker, and we have the answer this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in this budget debate and to join those who have already welcomed the five new hon. members to this Legislature.

I recall two or three years ago, Mr. Speaker, coming here for the first time and being very puzzled about almost everything that was to be found in these buildings. I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, that I thought at that time there should be some sort of instruction booklet available to new members, so perhaps I could make that suggestion to you. Perhaps some small sum of money could be made available to one of the members of the press gallery and perhaps they could write a primer on Queen's Park which could be made available to people when they come here for the first time.

Mr. Speaker, the five new hon. members, and indeed all hon. members of this House, have witnessed a rather remarkable performance in this House in the last week or two; a remarkable performance, Mr. Speaker, by the NDP financial critic and the NSF party spokesman.

The Liberal financial critic presented what might be called a latter day Doomsday Book, and the NDP financial critic read what could be entitled post-Argue neo-capitalism or Galbraith revisited.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. White: While listening to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) give his budget speech, some of us were saying "The Liberal Party should have given him some help in preparing that criticism." Imagine our surprise when we learned from the newspapers that the financial critic had the assistance of 12 Liberal economists and accountants. These must be the same men who provided the country with so much amusement when they gathered at Kingston a year or two ago to remake the Liberal Party.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): How many were there?

Mr. White: Twelve, yes. I have the article here.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): The hon. member has bats in the belfry.

Mr. White: The results of that convention in Kingston, hon. members may recall, were considered a fiasco even by the Liberal leadership.

With the kindest of intentions, I suggest that the hon. member for Bruce be left to produce his own criticism. While it may not have had too much intellectual content in the past, it did have sincerity of purpose which appeared to be missing from the latest rendition of the "blues" by his friends in the Liberal glee club.

Mr. Speaker, I suppose this bat is going to be here all day. If it has provided sufficient amusement to the hon. member across the way, they may be interested in hearing certain comments which I want to make about the inadequacies of their criticisms. This is typical of the way they let themselves be distracted by momentary diversions. I hope they will do me the courtesy of listening to my critique as I listened to theirs, painful though it was.

May I spend a few moments pointing out some of the more serious mistakes in this year's Liberal criticism?

Early in his remarks, the hon. member said "We Liberals smell the scent of victory." This brave claim was in marked contrast to the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) as reported in the Globe and Mail of August 5, 1960, which reads:

WINTERMEYER MUM

ON CHOICE OF CANDIDATE

Liberal leader John Wintermeyer called for victory in Timiskaming to show the province that the tide has turned toward Liberalism.

Upon this by-election hangs the future of the Liberal Party in Ontario, he said.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is ancient history.

Mr. White: I myself have to agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition in this dispute and I am confident that our efforts, together with his own, will prove the accuracy of his forecast.

The hon. member for Bruce accused the government of "cooking the books." As a businessman he should have known better and as an hon. member of this assembly he should have spoken more responsibly.

The changes in the accounts receivable and accounts payable accounts, 1960 versus 1961, are absolutely meaningless when considered by themselves, as the hon. member attempted to do. The increase or decrease of one or several asset or liability accounts means nothing at all in judging the success and profitability of a year's operation.

To use his own example, if a businessman increased his bank balance by $100 during the year he could well conclude that he had made $100 profit for the year, notwithstanding an increase in unpaid bills, providing his total assets had increased $100 more than his total liabilities. This effort to discredit the operating surplus by isolating two of several dozen asset and liability accounts is misleading in the extreme.

The fact is that the consolidated surplus realized during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961, as expressed in business terms, would be the operating surplus plus the increase in fixed assets—a total of $64.2 million. This is what we who are businessmen would call an operating profit. In business we would then deduct the non-cash expense of depreciation to give a net profit.

In effect, the government does the same thing by transferring certain funds from ordinary account—in effect expensing some of the increased investment in fixed assets—and at the same time setting up a reserve against fixed assets. If I may call the total of these two amounts depreciation for a moment, it will be seen that the government has depreciated its fixed assets by an average of about $87 million per year during the fiscal years 1957-1962.

I further calculate that this is a straight line depreciation rate of four or five per cent, which is likely the equivalent of a seven or eight per cent annual depreciation on reducing balance.

When it is considered that the federal government permits private corporations a five per cent depreciation rate on decreasing balance on this type of fixed asset for tax purposes, it must be concluded that the provincial government has used sound accounting principles and techniques and has stated surpluses in moderate fashion after judiciously increasing reserves for depreciation. It is a truly remarkable record for the period of growth concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bruce delights in the increase to the provincial debt of $423,929,000—this is his figure for the past five years—but does not point out that the fixed assets increased by nearly $1 billion—the difference of nearly half a billion dollars once again being what businessmen would call the operating profit for the period.

The provincial auditor's certificate was quoted in part to suggest that he was uneasy about the annual report. The hon. member knows full well that the fiscal statements of any substantial business operation include explanations, classifications and conditions. The provincial auditor states:

The balance sheet, statements of revenue and expenditure and other related statements are properly drawn up in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

Does a single hon. member opposite honestly believe that the provincial auditor would continue in that post if he were not well satisfied with the accuracy of the figures presented in the public accounts statements? Of course no one believes such a thing, or cries for resignation would be echoing in this chamber today.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has referred once again to the sales tax and to their party's exemption plan. The people of this province cannot be expected to place their confidence in a group that forecasts enormous debt increases for 1971 while promising greatly increased expenditures and lower taxes.

Mr. Whicher: I did not promise anything.

Mr. White: Well, the hon. member's colleagues are promising to pay for all the cost of education, to pay for everything else that comes their way. As recently as last weekend in Chatham, at the Liberal convention which the hon. member may or may not have attended, they promised almost everything they could think of—everything that costs money.

The fallacy in the Liberal sales tax plan has been described in detail several times in recent months and it would be redundant for me to assess this plan again. In fact, the hon. member for Bruce himself admitted a purchaser determined to avoid the tax would be able to do so. May I simply say that the so-called Wintermeyer plan is not easily rationalized with their financial critic's forecast of financial ruin. Once again the Liberal party of Ontario is consistent only in its inconsistencies.

The hon. member for Bruce referred to the civil service, hoping, I suspect, that they have forgotten that the last Liberal regime fired more than 3,000 civil servants without cause. He advocates higher salaries while implying reduced expenditures, so it may be that similar wholesale dismissals are part of the unannounced plans of the Liberal glee club—that secretive, shadowy group of Liberal advisors who claim to be so rich in intellect and who have proved to be so poor in faith and reason.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member is cooking words now. That is utter nonsense.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bruce complains of Ministers without Portfolio, but does not recall to our memories the good use to which Mackenzie King put four Ministers without Portfolio.

Mr. Whicher: Does the hon. member remember that?

Mr. White: He complains of the number of government departments but does not state which departments he would abolish, while other hon. members of his caucus promise a Department of Industry and a Department of Northern Affairs. He complains of the cost of acquiring land for highways yet would be the first to urge higher prices be paid in the name of justice to his farmers for their property. He asks: "What has the government done to ease the municipalities' education costs except wring their hands?", while conveniently forgetting that the $34 million spent by the Liberals on education in 1943 has been increased nearly tenfold by a government that recognizes today's well-educated young people are the fountainhead of our future prosperity.

He compares Canadian university enrolment with American figures which include our grades 12 and 13 pupils, Teachers' College, business school and technological students. He compares government departmental expenses, rounding off percentage points so that 1.5 per cent and 1.9 per cent appear as being unchanged at 2 per cent, but he omits The Departments of Health, Highways and Education, even though they are the largest departments of government, because they do not fit his fanciful theories.

He forecasts expenditures for 1971—which should provide this House with some jolly moments of recollection at that time—but does not mention that the net personal income in Ontario is likely to reach $18 billion to $20 billion. He dwells on possible deficits while discounting Ontario's future expansion, and chooses to ignore the fact that today's debt equals one and a half years' revenue compared to the six year debt pay-out of 1939-1940. He forgets, apparently, that in the late 1930's the net capital debt was 29 per cent of total personal income in this province compared with 10 per cent today.

Even if his dismal forecast of debt were right, the 1971 net capital debt would be nearly one-third less in relation to net personal income than when the Liberals were in power.

He urges contra-cyclical budgeting but must know that no province has the tax base to put this theory into practice.

Comparing capital investment, he carefully selects the years 1951 and 1959, but the fact is that Ontario's share of the nation's capital investment was fractionally higher during the five years ending 1961 than it was during the five years ending 1956. He details carefully selected unemployment figures but will not reveal recent improvement in unemployment or admit that Ontario's record has been far better than either Canada as a whole or the United States.

He complains that housing completions were down in 1960 but does not tell us that housing starts were up. He looks at the employment chart A15 in the economic report and states the percentage of the labour force engaged in primary and manufacturing industries is down, failing to point out that offsetting increases were experienced in trade and services.

After this 50-page attack on the province's resources, credit standing and future, what suggestion did the hon. member for Bruce have to offer this House? Let me remind him:

(1) He would expand the growth rate by encouraging increased capital investment, but he overlooks the fact that the 20 per cent Ontario rate compares with the U.S. rate of 17 per cent and that this government is doing everything humanly possible to maintain and expand this growth.

(2) He suggests that the province exert a powerful influence in securing growth but does not acknowledge that this is exactly what the government is doing through the Ontario Economic Council. And may I just say at this time that I for one, and I am sure most every hon. member of this House, was impressed by the 20 points brought forward the day before yesterday by the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay), a most remarkable and imaginative, a most encouraging, programme for the future development of this province, a programme that pales the Opposition criticism—

Mr. Whicher: It pales the past of the Tory party.

Mr. White: It pales the programmes that are put forward here and shows them to be completely inadequate, completely lacking in faith in this province and in its future.

(3) The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) advocates a searching review and reshaping of the entire tax structure by federal and provincial authorities but he did not say that this is exactly what the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts) has been urging time and time and time again for months, with the growing support of businessmen and taxation authorities in all parts of the province.

(4) He suggests an Ontario development fund but must know that this idea was suggested by hon. members of the government months ago and is being studied intensively right now.

(5) He says the Ontario government should induce automobile manufacturers to cease or decrease parts importation but ignores the Bladen report and the fact that tariffs are a federal responsibility.

(6) The hon. member suggests retraining labour but ignores the revolutionary expansion—yes, the revolutionary expansion of trades, technical and technological training in Ontario during the past 18 months. May I say here, sir, that I still do not know what the Liberal policy is in the matter of technical education.

An hon. member: Nobody else does.

Mr. White: I think it was January 24 or 31, 1961, that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) was quoted at great length on the bottom of the front page of the Toronto Globe and Mail to the effect that he did not think technological education was perhaps the answer. He thought more trades training was the answer. And now, in more recent weeks, we find spurious complaints against trades training, as if even automation, as if even electronic equipment, is going to do away with every internal combustion engine in the world or against people getting haircuts, etc., etc., etc.

I think that the hon. members of the Liberal party would be doing the people in this province a great service if they would say what their policy is concerning education and technical education. I do not know, and they do not know, and the people of this province do not know.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member will find out soon enough.

Mr. White: It is different every week; it is different with every speaker.

Mr. Speaker, these suggestions, all of which have been or are being implemented by the present government, are called the policies and programmes of the Liberal party, which forces us to conclude that, while they speak in terms of 1971, they think in terms of 1941. There is not one single new constructive idea or criticism in the 66 pages of verbiage and carefully selected statistics produced by the financial critic, his colleagues, and the Liberal glee club. When he states that these are the policies and programmes worthy of the people of Ontario he deceives himself and insults the men and women of this province.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Would the hon. member permit a question? Did I understand him correctly to state that the government is putting into effect the programme that the Liberals are advancing and this is proof that the Liberal programme is equivalent to 1941?

Mr. White: Well, the hon. member has misconstrued that deliberately. I worded that with the greatest of care so that mistake could not be implied.

Mr. MacDonald: I was listening carefully.

Mr. White: I am saying purely and simply that the Liberals have seized upon six of 100 good ideas that this government is working on and is implementing—

Mr. MacDonald: You have proven well that your policies—

Mr. White: Well, feel free to read this in Hansard, and I think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would point out to the hon. members of this House once again that all members will have an opportunity to speak in this debate, and I am going to see to it that those who do speak obtain order.

Mr. White: This Liberal programme has the strength and consistency of a mouthful of warm tapioca. It is not worthy of the remains of the once-great Liberal party, let alone the province as a whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention some of the galloping Galbraithian theories of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden). It should be said at the outset that while the NDP financial critic talked in terms of concerted federal-provincial action in each of his five major proposals, the fact is that the federal government has almost 100 per cent of the responsibility and authority to implement these ideas.

This is not to say that the hon. member for Woodbine was ill-advised in putting these suggestions forward in this place. In my judgment, it is entirely suitable and even desirable for a provincial member to offer suggestions in this Legislature on matters of national concern. On the other hand, it is likely not desirable that prolonged debate be undertaken here on such national affairs and I do not propose to enter into detailed discussion.

I cannot resist the observation that the CCF, having failed once again to attract widespread support by changing its name, now seems determined to woo the Canadian electorate by changing its clothing. The raiments of the Regina manifesto—1933 model—were thrown aside, tattered and torn, when the 1956 Winnipeg mantle was put on. This garb in turn was replaced by the new look of the Ottawa declaration of 1961. Now the hon. member for Woodbine wants to change the suit again in a desperate effort to attract the public fancy.

The Woodbine manifesto of March 9, 1962, is a radically different style from its fore-runners but the label is the same. It is the continuing label of class antipathy that revealed itself time and time again during the hon. member's speech, and it is this label of class antipathy that alienates the support of the Canadian people in the market place, or should I say the polling places of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) for a budget that is exciting while sensible, expansionist while businesslike, and dynamic while responsible.

I congratulate the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) on an economic statement that reflects his own great ability, his own vitality, energy and dedication. While his courage and character are such that he needs no defender, I am compelled to say and to deplore the fact that the Opposition attacks on this hon. Minister are becoming maliciously unfair in quality and quantity.

The economic statement refers to the European Common Market and enumerates the potential advantages and disadvantages to Ontario. The hon. Minister's approach is a constructive one, as hon. members would expect from this extremely capable public servant. He said:

As standards of living rise in western Europe, there will be large potential markets and greater opportunities for exporters of consumer goods as well as industrial raw materials.

Walter Lippman thinks that Britain's entry into the European Common Market will be the most significant world event in decades, dwarfing the Berlin crisis and all other similar temporary crises. I would like the hon. Minister of Economics and Development to consider appointing one or several of his senior economists to spend all of their time studying the European Common Market and scrutinizing its expansion and evolution.

Our economic well-being may depend to a large extent on our ability to adapt to changing world markets, and the European Common Market is going to be the key to this revolutionary development. Our industries deserve to be extremely well-informed and assisted to the full by our government, and we in Ontario cannot do too much to prepare them in this way for changing competitive conditions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

I wonder if he agrees with the Ottawa theory on the common market, or the Macaulay theory?

Mr. White: I believe that the European Common Market is going to be of immense concern and direct economic influence to every hon. member of this House and every member of the Ontario public. And I think that if we in this government, or governments elsewhere than Ontario, fail to keep very well informed, fail to keep our policies and programmes flexible and changing to meet this changing pattern of world trade, we will have failed the people in our economy. As a matter of fact, I am amazed that the financial critics have not spent a great deal of time on the European Common Market; the reason, of course, is that once again they have failed to recognize the really important changes that are taking place in the world. They have failed to keep in touch with it and, of course, the penalty is going to be continued apposition.

The economic report states:

Our merchandise trade deficit with the US as well as our deficit on tourist account are matters to which we must give increasing attention.

Without offending our American friends, I wonder if we could not encourage some of those who seek warmer climes at this time of the year to go to British Commonwealth resort areas in the Caribbean rather than to the southern States. It used to grieve me some years ago to see members of the federal government flock to Florida, and I seem to note an encouraging switch in recent years to the Bahamas and other Commonwealth countries. It is not the money that these style leaders spend themselves that is so important; what is important is the money spent by the thousands of people who follow their example.

Since it is more difficult and expensive to get to Bermuda and other islands, the government might find a way to encourage low-priced excursion transportation for tourists who otherwise would drive to Florida. Exactly how this could be done I do not know, but perhaps some other hon. member of this House can enlarge on the nucleus of this idea.

Another quotation from the economic report reads:

Development of quality control techniques and the improvement in design constitute objectives at which Canada and Ontario industry must constantly aim.

The Japanese, I understand, have established a powerful quality control export committee which approves or prohibits goods being exported so that their exports will enhance rather than detract from the newly-acquired Japanese reputation for quality. A like committee in Ontario perhaps would not coincide with our philosophy of free enterprise, but the new Ontario Economic Council should establish a subcommittee to study at the very least the desirability of establishing a quality-control committee to encourage research and stimulate improved design and better production of consumer goods for export. The hon. George Drew suggested federal tax incentives for this purpose eight years ago, and the merit of this approach seems more obvious with each year that passes.

Mr. Speaker, the new budget reinforces my firm belief that Ontario stands on a new threshold of bold achievement under the leadership of a new government whose depth of purpose and breadth of vision is quickly becoming known to our people.

I was pleased to learn that the government had underspent its budget in the fiscal year 1961-1962 by introducing economies and improving efficiency, thus saving the taxpayers of the province $34 million. The careful scrutiny given every expenditure by the Treasury board is well known to every hon. member on both sides of this House, whose whose own ambitions for personal requests have failed to pass the severe test of Treasury board investigation. This same hardheaded business approach has enabled the government to expand its essential services for 1962-

1963 in the fields of education, health and welfare, without any additional taxes, or increase in existing taxes. This news was greeted with huzzas by the press and public of the province. There is the headline from the London Free Press:

RECORD BUDGET HOLDS NO TAX BOOSTS

This news was greeted with huzzas by the press and public of the province, and so the new Prime Minister and his new government move from strength to strength in an ever-progressing programme of human betterment.

The Treasurer's declaration that: "This year's budget like its predecessors, has been formulated to exert a positive effect upon the Ontario economy," was borne out by the policy statements and fiscal information that followed. Investment in the education of Ontario youth increased $61 million to $330 million, thereby accounting for half of this year's budgetary increase.

Investment in health and welfare is increased by $19.2 million to a new total of $205 million. One exciting innovation was the introduction of special bursaries for medical and dental students willing to serve in outlying areas of the province. Very imaginative, and I congratulate the government on it.

Enlarged also were the out-patient services provided under the Ontario Hospital Services Plan. The cost of this improvement is likely to be offset by the savings in hospital beds.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would call to the attention of the hon. members of this House that quietness must reign while a member is speaking. Once again I say that other members will have their opportunities. Other members, indeed, have had their chances to speak, and when they have I have preserved order and I intend to do it this morning.

Mr. White: The cost of the enlargement of out-patient services is likely to be offset by the savings on hospital beds—reduced capital maintenance expenses in that other direction.

This is what I call good business. This is what I call good government. Listen to just a few of the important provisions of this new budget: new five year plan for economic development; 200 more provincial policemen; broadened exemptions in retail sales taxes and simplified collection procedures for small retailers; stabilized hospital insurance premiums; new low-rental housing plans; increased pensions for those qualifying for old age assistance, blind persons' and disabled persons' allowance; additional assistance for northern Ontario enterprises; additional assistance once again for the municipalities of the province; and on and on it goes—an endless list of bold achievement.

The hon. members of this House will agree with me, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the new hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), with his wisdom and stability, the hon. Treasurer (Mr. Allan) whose dignity, ability and integrity illuminate this House, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) whose vision, initiative and dedication are an inspiration to all members of this Legislature—yes, sir, we all agree that these hon. Ministers and their distinguished colleagues in the Cabinet are leading this province to greater accomplishment, greater prosperity, and greater glory for all of the people of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, Ontario is “A-OK,” and the economic signal is “GO.”

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, after the storm comes the tranquil waters quietly down the stream. Mr. Speaker, as this is the second time this session I have addressed you, the felicitations I conveyed to you before, of course, still apply in this instance.

In speaking on the debate on the budget, I will be very brief. But I would be remiss if I did not bring to your attention what I consider the rather precarious and deviating course of Metropolitan Toronto.

Metropolitan Toronto, Bill No. 80, was the master production of three outstanding and able men. It took Lorne Cumming to build it. It took the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) to make it. And it took “Big Daddy” Gardiner to carry it out. That was some years ago. Metro has since become a successful international curiosity, to the extent that everybody from Tokyo to Winnipeg is or has been studying the system. But it is becoming obvious now that the Metro system, to some degree, has outlived its very useful beginning.

Let us face the facts!

Downtown Toronto—Bay Street if you want to identify it as that, but I defy anybody to actually define what Bay Street is—downtown Toronto is a tremendous asset, not only to Toronto but also to Metro, Ontario and the whole of Canada. But along with progress and development, the trend of concentration is changing. There is already a full flight of industry and business to new locations in the suburbs.

We as legislators cannot let that great asset of downtown Toronto, the very heart of this great metropolis, deteriorate as it very well could.

Metro is now faced with multi-million dollar expenditures on expressways and subways, as well as all the other commitments that Metro was set up for. On one hand The Department of Highways has decreed in its wisdom that the Spadina Expressway must be constructed to Bloor Street in its initial phase, with a Spadina subway extension. On the other hand, the Ontario Municipal Board is strongly suggesting that Metro make a very complete reappraisal of all its financing. Not only the projects it is already committed to, but also TTC projects which the TTC now admits can no longer be carried out without raising fares to the point of diminishing returns.

Obviously Metro has reached a new stage in its development.

Metro is no longer a super municipal government, although like any municipal government Metro is always a creature of Queen's Park.

Metro is now something between a municipal and a sovereign Ontario government.

There is still plenty of wealth in downtown Toronto, at least enough to pay the costs of works such as subways, expressways, etc., to maintain and guarantee downtown's Toronto essential existence. The question is: how do you tap that great wealth?

The answer must lie with this government. Either it gives Metro a broader tax basis, to be applied where Metro sees fit, and get the monkey off the residential taxpayers' back, or it gives Metro the money from provincial revenues to do the job Metro has to do. It must be one way or the other. A special Metro tax, or special grants to Metro. There appears to be no other solution, Mr. Speaker.

Since no one really expects any government to farm out its taxing powers, the grant system on a special basis appears to be the overall answer.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that Metro government is in a state of transition and economic and political evolution. No one expects to produce an answer overnight to this great problem. However, my people do expect that our government will grapple with this situation, and come up in the near future with—if not all the answers—at least the solution to some of the problems involved.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak, sir, on this budget debate.

When the speeches to the Throne were completed during that particular afternoon I happened to be flying over the city of Toronto and over this Legislature. The plane that I was in, because of a 500-foot ceiling, was unable to land. The pilot informed us that if we could not land in Toronto—of course he said he would try to land and after zooming back and forth he finally decided it was too tough—we would try to land in London and if we did not land in London we would land in Cleveland. Fortunately I was able to land in the riding of the hon. member who spoke just before the last speaker—whether the airport is in his particular part of the riding I am not sure. However, we landed safely in Toronto after the low ceiling had moved off to the east.

An hon. member: He is still up in the air.

Mr. Chapple: I would like to talk a little bit about the problem that the government seems to have in being economical in its spending. During the length of time I have been here I have been very worried about this feature of government and have tried on most occasions to assist through a certain amount of criticism, although I have always tried to make it constructive.

But before I go on with the gist of what I was going to say, I would like to inform the House that a matter reached my desk this morning concerning the particular problem the government seems to have—I do not see why it should—but seems to have, in spending money in such amounts that seems to be more or less, at least in my opinion, to a great degree more than is absolutely or actually necessary.

This refers to a farm which is in my particular area. In the Tuesday issue of the Port Arthur News Chronicle, this statement is made. This is of course, a federal concern but it is a good indication of the type of thing that does happen, and in this case actually has happened.

Mr. Hamilton, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, wrote that the area under cultivation north of Lake Superior is increasing, but there is no experimental farm between Kapuskasing and Winnipeg. The purpose of the farm will be to grow test forage and pasture crops. No livestock will be involved. It is hoped to have a laboratory and a few small buildings for a staff of half a dozen by 1963.

Now this involves a property of 70 acres and, hon. members, the amount involved for the purchase of these 70 acres is $315,000. This $315,000 is, of course, the amount that was announced directly from the government in the Port Arthur paper. But when we come to the Fort William paper—Fort William Times Journal—we find the cost to be about $225,000.

On the basis of $315,000, the property is worth $4,500 an acre. I know about this particular property, it is within a 100-acre lot of my own. It is actually divided, I believe, into two parts. One follows Highway 130 along the line towards adjoining Highway 61. On the left hand side of the road, or to the east, there are 50 acres of land which are made up of a sandy loam; on the right hand side, the owner of the property had divided an area along the road for two-acre lots according to the zoning bylaw and many of these lots are sold. Farther on, on the other side of the 100-acre lot he has approximately 20 acres. So I imagine that the total amount which was sold to the government was the combination of this 50 acres on the left hand side of the road and the 20 acres on the right hand side of the road.

Back in 1946, in this area farther to the south, I purchased a 100-acre lot for $11 an acre or $1,100 for this particular lot, which was cleared except for an area where a ravine cuts off a portion which could not be used.

Also, there is a farm lying between this particular part that was purchased, or is in the throes of being purchased, and my own which consists of 300-acre lots and has a dairy herd consisting of around 70 head. It is better land than the land which was already purchased, because on this particular land the soil had been well fertilized and well developed.

I was offered this land a year ago for $150,000—that is the whole farm for $150,000—because the wife of the owner of this property had died just recently and he wanted to get cash for the property. It was a matter of a family deal where he felt that division of the property could be better made on a cash basis. He finally came down to the point where he said: John, I am offering you this whole deal here, I will give it to you for $100,000 cash. I did not want the farm so the deal did not go through; I had enough to do without taking on another farm of this size.

But I would like to point out to hon. members that 300 acres of land which is still there in this particular farm—there are a number of buildings on it, there are barns on it and other types of buildings on it—these whole 300 acres are still there. I imagine if the government were to contact this farmer, he might want to sell it. This farm I am sure could have been purchased by the government at a greatly reduced price, Mr. Speaker; a much better farm, with greater acreage.

This is what I am afraid of with government spending and government operations. It is very unfortunate that government money has to be wasted in this manner.

I was very interested last night—the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) is not in his seat, I hoped he would be—but I was very interested in his remarks last night. Twenty-five years ago when I was in Geraldton we had a mining community and there were times when it was stated across the Dominion that the streets of Geraldton were paved with gold. Well, the gold never did come on the streets. We had a great many mines there which are ghost mines today, but we never did get the streets of Geraldton paved with gold.

If hon. members go up to Atikokan they will find at certain times of the year that the streets of Atikokan are paved with the iron ore dust emanating from Steep Rock ore mine open pits. This actually happens and I hope it can continue to happen, because it shows that the industry is still in operation. But so far we have not found that on the streets of Port Arthur we are able to walk along and pick up diamonds.

Diamonds, I understand, are a possibility as far as mining is concerned in Moosonee. I certainly hope that the hon. Minister is able to find these diamonds and to distribute them among the members of his riding. I hope that in the adjoining riding of Fort William we will be privileged to participate in the good luck or good fortune of the hon. Minister himself.

About the economic setup of northwestern Ontario. It is something on which we feel we are making progress. We also feel that to a great extent we are doing it ourselves. The government is helping, yes, in certain areas; but I think hon. members will find that back in 1960 northwestern Ontario went ahead when we were in an unemployment situation which was very aggravating at the time. The labour councils were interested in it. What finally came out of it was the northwestern Ontario commission on employment.

The commission was set up under the auspices of both cities and the whole district and a study was made. The commission was set up in December, 1960, to study employment problems in the region. Money for the study was contributed by the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur and by the northwestern Ontario development association. Each commissioner made a personal contribution of his energy, experience and time during the year of the study. A senior economist from the federal Department of Labour helped the commission to organize such procedures. During the first few months of 1961 the commissioners familiarized themselves with national employment trends and forecasts. It became clear that the regional problem was too serious and too complicated to permit a short study.

The commissioners prepared and mailed detailed questionnaires to 3,100 employers and 120 union locals in northwestern Ontario to obtain information and opinions of the short and long term employment problems. The questionnaires were returned from 800 employers and locals covering a labour force of over 27,000 men and women. The information and opinions from the questionnaires were combined with the commission's own fact-finding studies during the summer months. This report consists of material selected from the 40 graphs, 100 tables and charts and 40,000 words collected and prepared during the study.

The brief covers many things and basically puts forward the problems in northwestern Ontario, probably to a much more detailed degree than anything we have had. From this particular report—through its suggestions—we have brought into being the committee which was recommended.

The committee as recommended was this: a regional advisory council should be formed in northwestern Ontario. The council would be responsible for continuing investigation, public education and the co-ordination of regional development proposals. The council should consist of not more than 11 representatives from the public and private sectors of our economy. The council's function would be different from that of the northwestern Ontario development association which is a promotional organization of the province and local municipality. The regional advisory council would work in close liaison with chambers of commerce, municipal associations, the northwestern Ontario development association and similar agencies.

This council actually has been appointed and I have the names of those who have been appointed and a start has been made.

The next suggestion made by this particular commission was that a regional economic conference be held in March. I doubt very much whether this will happen. But in the meantime we have had appointed from the government another council for northwestern Ontario and this council is going to be headed up by Mr. D. A. Clark who is a very prominent man at the head of the lakes. I have known him myself for a great many years and appreciate his knowledge and ability. I am not sure whether the members have as yet been appointed or designated, but I do know that the advisory council appointed by the northwest Ontario commission on employment was set up.

This regional advisory council is an independent group of citizens of the region who will, by their experience and training, represent the major facets of economic and social life in northwestern Ontario. The council consists of two men from Fort William, two from Neebing, two from Paipoonge, two from Port Arthur and two from Shuniah, which covers that whole general area. The council should consist of members who are prominent and outspoken in the fields of agriculture, investments, iron ore, gold, law, pulp and paper, real estate, retail trades, transportation and unions.

The secretary of this board, Mr. Harry Parsons, says that in the time since the publication of the report the government of Ontario has established a northern development committee to be chaired by Mr. D. A. Clark. The commission does not know the exact terms of reference of this proposed organization and has decided to go ahead with its own programme until the situation is clarified. Duplications can be avoided by liaisons or mergers with the northern development committee.

Now, this is all very good and—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question please?

Mr. Chapple: Certainly; it is a pleasure.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I just want to say that the information that the hon. member has given is factual. I know all the men he is speaking of and they have done a good job. The other day I had a letter from Mr. Clark—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Question—no speeches. What is the question?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I wanted to know if he knew that this group was working with this new economic council he is speaking of. Mr. Parsons is in touch with them and they are working together.

Mr. Chapple: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly thank the hon. Minister for the information he gives me. I know he is very well informed, particularly about diamonds.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I thank the hon. member for Fort William; I appreciate that. The more advertising he gives it the better. He may be surprised one of these days.

Mr. Chapple: Unfortunately, in northwestern Ontario, in spite of what the hon. Minister of Mines says, it is not all easy going. I would like to read a small item taken from the Port Arthur News Chronicle. This is an article which makes us feel very depressed about the future of our part of the country. The heading of the article is:

LOSE $1 MILLION PULPWOOD MARKET BECAUSE OF COSTS

A familiar sight in Port Arthur—their residence for over 30 years—a harbour filled with pulp logs awaiting the spring thaw, has disappeared this year due to cost problems, said D. A. Clark, president of the Great Lakes Lumber and Shipping Company today. Mr. Clark said that for many years his firm had exported 35,000 cords of wood valued at about $1 million to the Silveny Pulp and Paper Company at Taconna, Wisconsin. Rising costs of our wood due to increased labour and operating costs have made the company seek a new market, he explained. The paper company now gets its wood in the form of chips from sawmill operations in Denver, Colorado.

"I do not see how we can get the market back," Mr. Clark stated. "Production costs in those areas of the United States are cheaper than ours and it will be difficult to regain the business unless conditions here have changed.

"This raised quite a complicated problem with many of the smaller operators at the head of the lakes. Unfortunately, the northern part of the United States, in the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin and so on, there are many areas where the growth of trees is coming to the point of maturity. Here we have operators who can, or seem to be able to, cut their lumber or their pulpwood cheaper than we can do it."

Now I have had many representations to me from labour at the head of the lakes telling me that they are not getting enough for their cutting, per cord, for what they are producing. They say it is not enough, they need more; they have to have a larger cordage price for what they are selling. They cannot operate because of the fact that they are not getting enough for the labour that they do.

Well, I can agree with this; it is quite possible that they are not and I can agree with them to that extent. But the cost of getting cordage from our particular area has risen to the point where competitively the men who are selling this pulp to the United States or to whoever they sell it, are not able to be competitive with the areas of the northern States. It is very unfortunate.

If the costs are raised higher more of these operators are going to go out of business and when it comes to this point, there will be no jobs at all for the people interested in this type of development.

Now if Mr. Clark, as chairman of this new committee that has been set up, can solve this particular problem, he will certainly be doing something really great for northwestern Ontario. Not that pulpwood is not moving out of northwestern Ontario to all the mills around creating a certain amount of work in the woods and the bush; a great deal of this was done this year; but not nearly to the extent that it has been done in former years.

One of the things that I wanted to bring to the attention of the government is what I consider possibly to be of more importance than anything, for the best interests of this province. That is the Trans-Canada highway or the lack of same. We have not only one Trans-Canada highway, we have two Trans-Canada highways, yet we have no Trans-Canada highway. That may sound a little complicated but it is actually the case.

The government should have shown leadership in this regard. If the government had said: "We are going to have a Trans-Canada highway," the federal government would have said, "You shall have a Trans-Canada highway. We will help you; we are going to supply a good percentage of the cost of the Trans-Canada highway."

But the government was not satisfied with this. A Trans-Canada highway across the province of Ontario would have done more for the people of Ontario as a whole than anything we can possibly think of. Look what it would have meant to us. The people in the States would have come up here and gone across by this highway. They would have had at least some ingress to the province on both sides instead of having a province with one Trans-Canada highway called Highway No. 7, another called Highway No. 11, and then Highway No. 17. It should be Trans-Canada Highway No. 1. This would have been something important and this should have been done 20 years ago. But what have we got?—

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Outline that route.

Mr. Chapple: I am going to, that is just exactly what I am going to do, and I am not going to do it with a great deal of pleasure because I feel very unhappy about it. I would like to point this out: first you have Highway No. 17 running from the Quebec border, through Ottawa to North Bay. But have you ever travelled on Highway No. 17? That is not a highway; it needs to be rebuilt—and all I am asking for is a two-lane highway.

After North Bay you continue on Highway 17, you go to the Sault. Well, I am not sure about how that highway is, but if it is in the same condition it was when I last travelled it, it would not be too good. You go on from Sault Ste. Marie and you get to the area which has just been newly built. This is a very good highway, but the unfortunate part of this particular section of the highway is that you cannot find it.

The people in the Sault say: "Well, here is this highway, fine, we will find it." So they travel for 70 miles over a poor road and they finally hit it. The people of Fort William say: "Well, this is a lovely highway, let us find it," you travel for another 75 miles before you hit it and when you do hit it of course, well, it is a very nice highway. But why for goodness sake did not the government complete this highway before they opened it?

Take the highway encircling Lake Superior, something of which we are very proud, and which I travelled around when it was opened, being what we called at that time a Lakehead admiral—I do not mind being an admiral as long as they do not ask me to go on the water. Sixty of us made this trip around Lake Superior. Now how can the government sell something that is not there?

If the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) had opened this highway at Wawa, if he had opened it when it was completed, there would have been no complaint; we would have had something really worthwhile to offer the people of the States and our other tourists. But here is a half-finished highway presented to the people of the States as something wonderful. Can The Department of Travel and Publicity advertise a highway unless, with any degree of—an hon. member suggests the word “accuracy,” well the accuracy of the statement is pretty faint—around Lake Superior we still have not got anything of which we can be proud.

Then Highway 11, the second highway that runs across Canada, which originally was supposed to be a part of the Trans-Canada Highway—and, of course, in 1941 that highway was so-called completed. I was there at Sturgeon River when the ribbon was cut, the highway was opened; and today, a few years later, this highway still has not been completed, not to highway specifications—particularly around Cochrane, Hearst and these areas. A little bit is being done every year and it is being stretched out and stretched out and stretched out.

If one goes on farther from there you say, well the hon. Minister says, we have a highway from Fort William to the Manitoba border. We have; but 120 miles of this highway is still not up to Trans-Canada Highway specifications. And if the hon. Minister knows what that means he will agree with me that no tourists, particularly American tourists, are going to come across our country until we have a highway that is up to these standards. You have highway—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is it true that the tourist business in our area, over Highways 17 and 11, increased 100 per cent last summer over the year before?

Mr. Chapple: I would be very pleased to answer that question. I would be very pleased to answer it this way: that if this increase the hon. Minister says occurred, and I feel he may be approximately right, it does not mean anything to Ontario. These people came up to see good highways, these people came up to go through Ontario, and what do they say when they go back to the States; just what will they say?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: They will say they are surprised.

Mr. Chapple: They are not going to come back; is the hon. Minister selling Ontario? Of course not. The tourist rate would increase 10 times if we had a decent highway across Ontario. The hon. Minister does a false selling job, and anybody can do a false selling job, and he knows what happens afterwards. There is no second trip; there is no proper job being done in Ontario, none whatever; but the waste which was done on highways, of duplication—highways which were done and had to be redone—readjusted, being levelled, the turns, the sections that have to be taken out, the bridges that have to be built and so on, is a terrific waste which has been accepted by this department of the Ontario government, and accepted by the federal government, and which should not have been accepted.

The leadership of the Ontario government in this regard is just out of this world; into orbit, the way—well, we will not go into orbit, we will get right down to earth and the Liberal government will see that a highway is built for us. And it will get done.

But we do not want a costly highway; we want a good, straight highway built to specifications; and only a two-lane highway—that is all we want. We have never had it, we never will get it at the rate that the job is being done. Of course, the hon. Minister knows as well as anyone else that we have another highway, No. 11, which is a part of this deal; it is a straight duplication of highway 17—it runs from Highway 17 to Atikokan; some day it is going to get to Fort Frances at terrific cost—why did the government not go ahead and build one highway first? Why not have one highway first? The others can come. And what about the transportation across Ontario or the lack of same? The hon. Minister knows what is happening as well as I do. Most people who want to go from the west to the east go down south of the lake; they by-pass us.

On top of that again, all the transportation from eastern Canada to western Canada goes the same route and by-passes our part of the country. It is ridiculous. He knows it as well as I do. It is something that is straight governmental lack of decision.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is an entirely erroneous—

Mr. Singer: What point is this? He is out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) is mumbling about, but I do know the facts.

I have been worrying about different things that go on in this province. It has bothered me; it has bothered me over the years. I think the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) will recognize the fact that, as chairman of the tourist committee back in 1947-1948, I worried about this problem then and I got nowhere. I am still worrying about it now and I still do not think I will get anywhere.

There is one thing I feel, being a retailer—the unfortunate problem that retailing is faced with in this province. We have as retailers a job to perform, and unfortunately this job is not being performed to the degree to which it should. Unfortunately it is mostly through control that the problem arises; there is control on the municipal level, and not only does this control on the municipal level seem to grow but retailers themselves are asking for more control. The control that I am referring to is the control of store hours.

As far as store hours are concerned I have had a great deal to do with this. I have always been of the opinion that a merchant has a job to perform; and if he does his job right he will be successful. His management will be successful but he must have the ability and the type of operation which gives him sufficient volume, and sufficient and good administration, to do the type of job a retailer should do. A retailer is a service, does a service, is a service man.

This problem in controlling store hours does not emanate from the general public at all; it does not emanate from council; it emanates from the poor retailer—the retailer who cannot operate himself but puts himself into a position where: “I cannot get what I want so therefore I am going to put everybody else in the same position.” And this is unfortunate, because if we do not have proper competitive outlets, and they are there—one can go to England, go anywhere one likes and one will find stores of all kinds open according to the demands and desires of their management which relates entirely to the service that they can and do, to and for their customers.

It is unfortunate that retailers do not realize this, do not realize that they should have their hands free to do the kind of operation that they can do to the best interests of all. I do not feel that a retailer should come to the government to have his problems solved, because he cannot have his problems solved by government; he must have his problems solved through good management.

In the last day or so we have had the game and fisheries convention here and The Department of Lands and Forests have been holding their meetings for people who are interested in this particular vocation. I would like to make a comment on three things that came up during these meetings which I feel are important to me and for which possibly other people may have the same feeling.

One was a bill which I go along with entirely, suggesting that we be very careful with the handling and the distributing of sprays—spraying of, indiscriminate use of sprays over areas, any areas, particularly by airplane and so on; because this type of thing not only looks after the disease or that particular job that the spray is supposed to eradicate, or disease that the spray is supposed to eradicate, it also kills the living bacteria, the living insects, animals, birds and so on in the area. This is deplorable.

The indiscriminate use of spray is one of the things which is going to ruin our natural habitat; there is no doubt about this. I am not against spraying as used on some particular project, or for some particular project, which is going to be definitely looked after by the person concerned. It is something at which he makes a living; he has to have spray to protect himself in this particular area, therefore he is quite satisfied to kill off the insects, all the birds, in that particular area to look after this job. That is fine, that is OK. But for the government, or Department of Agriculture, or any individual who takes this particular job on, indiscriminate spraying of our forest areas for any purpose at all is not conducive to the best development of our wild life.

I would advise the government therefore to be very careful in this regard, and to look after this with kid gloves, because we all know that accidents happen through people who do not understand the use and the strength of the spray that they are using.

Another thing I would like to comment on is this: a resolution came up which said that we should have placed tailored trees along our highways. This tailored tree idea is fine, it possibly would increase the beauty of our highways, but when one puts out these trees first one has to have the proper type of soil to put them in. I have seen trees put up by the department and by people, who find within a year, maybe six months, that these trees have died because they were not put in proper soil.

The next thing is the proper moisture; how are you going to supply these trees with the proper moisture.

How are we going to prevent these trees being killed through frost? This is something

I feel the government should not go into. The government should not go into this type of thing at all. It is something that is not needed in the first place. It is not necessary. They are generally put in between highways, a four-lane highway with an opening in the centre, they put trees in between there. These trees are a hazard if they grow big, or even if they do not grow big, particularly in night travelling.

I do not see any use, any real use, for trees on any highway. The trees can be growing naturally like they do up in our country away from the highways, but they do at least grow.

The third thing that came up which was a very contentious thing and which the department, I hope, will look into because it was demanded by a great many of those present, is the department's policy towards research in connection with wolves and deer. In Algonquin Park they are studying a method by which they can control deer within the park by the use of wolves. But those tourist operators who are outside this particular area are not interested in wolves controlling deer, they are interested in deer being in evidence. Because of wolves being indiscriminately allowed to go in packs through these areas, many deer have been killed, particularly in the winter time. The wastage of animals by these deer being killed by wolves lies in the fact that an animal will be killed and maybe five pounds of meat or so taken by the wolf and then the carcass is left to rot. This is very unfortunate.

The Department of Lands and Forests would do well to concentrate on some way, some type of regulation, which will make it possible for the farmers, the tourist operators to control wolves—the farmers, of course, are having trouble with wolves because of the fact that sheep are being destroyed by them.

If we start out trying to find a way to study wolves, we should be trying to find a way of destroying wolves. If these wolves are destroyed and taken out of the area entirely, we can control the growth of the areas as far as the land is concerned and we can also control the number of deer in any area through sportsmen who would be asked to come up and have something to shoot. Or, if in some areas the deer are destructive, these deer can be moved to areas that are not overrun to the extent where the growth is being destroyed.

Those are the three things I got out of the committee meetings held by The Department of Lands and Forests and the three things on which I felt criticism was necessary for the better operation of our government.

I know the ND Party will not be very happy about me bringing up this next subject, but I am going to bring it up anyway. I know that there is a problem here, it is a problem no one can really handle without a great deal of soul searching. This particular item which I have in my hand is headlined:

OFFENCE TO DISCRIMINATE IN HIRING, BOARD DECIDES

The Ontario Labour Relations Board in a precedent-setting decision has ruled that employers are prohibited by law from refusing employment to all who become because of minimum of union activity.

An hon. member: The hon. member should read the rest of it.

Mr. Chapple: I cannot read the rest of it.

Mr. D. C. Macdonald (York South): He cannot read, period.

Mr. Chapple: One reason why I am not going to read the rest of it—it is a little funny, this particular point is—I think I can cover it without doing so. My glasses do not seem to be operating too well, the print is a bit small, and the difficulties which are entailed, will possibly make it better if I were to explain the situation more or less in my own words.

The company involved—actually it is not one company, it is two—this particular company took over, a company from the States took over a company in Canada, a powdered milk company. In the taking over of this company there was a dispute as to whether two particular members of a union should or should not be kept on by the company that did the purchasing.

Now let us go back to the basis of these things. Why would a Canadian company, if it were operating properly, why would a Canadian company want to sell out to an American company? When hon. members have a business, if it is a profitable business, they are going to keep it, it is going to be worthwhile. But unless within the company itself there is a feeling of common purpose on what they are doing, that they are all working together for one purpose, then that particular company will not operate and continue to operate.

It is the basic thing that we are all worried about here in Ontario. The fact that not only do our big companies have to come together or amalgamate in order to keep operating, through cost, competition and all the other things involved, but the fact that so many of our small companies, the companies which are the life blood of the whole of Ontario, these particular companies that are important to us are disappearing.

Yet in this particular case, as I read more or less between the lines, the big problem with this company was the fact that it could not operate. The reasons it could not operate could be varied, could be many, I know from my own experience. But in this particular case, the company that took over the Canadian company ran into the same difficulty with which the company was faced.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Why did they not fire the union leaders or refuse to hire them?

Mr. Chapple: The union leaders in this particular case—the labour members—were fired. And the unfortunate part of this, we have legislation which can discriminate. There is a law that went through that we can discriminate, but who are we going to discriminate against? Is it the operator, the manufacturer, the fellow who is trying to stay in business? Are we going to discriminate against labour or are we going to discriminate against the people who want and need these businesses in operation so that they can be taxed so that they can help to carry the load which this government is prepared—

Mr. Bryden: This is the full flower of Liberalism.

Mr. Chapple: This is the important thing that we have to face. I am not saying that we should help—

An hon. member: Is this Liberal policy?

Mr. Chapple: This is not a demand that we fire the union, this is not a demand that we put businesses out of business; what we are doing is this one thing: we are trying to bring this together to the point where the best interests of the people of Ontario are served.

Mr. MacDonald: By killing the unions?

An hon. member: He did not say that.

Mr. Chapple: The unions serve a very worthwhile purpose; the hon. member knows it and I know it. But there are discriminations in many areas and I feel that the board has too much responsibility in this regard. There is no doubt about this if the problems within the businesses cannot be solved. This particular board said that the two union men had to pay back the back pay; that was fine, this is an order, and I imagine the company accepted it; but what is going to happen in the operation of this company—is there going to be good feeling, are the people going to work together and do a good job? Is this thing going to be worthwhile?

Mr. MacDonald: Is there going to be good feeling if the government does not treat the unions the right way?

Mr. Chapple: All right. They are being treated according to the best interests of any operation. These have to be based on the decisions of management on the whole, and if management cannot get the job going—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is like the Irish. He is neutral but who is he neutral against?

Mr. Chapple: Who is the hon. member for York South neutral for? That is the thing I have been wondering about.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chapple: I find the ND Party amusing if nothing else. There is no doubt about it that there is a certain feeling of respect, and always has been and always will be, by the Liberal Party for labour. Labour has done more to really develop the real basic means of the labouring people; the hon. member knows that, we know that; this is something that, as far as democracy is concerned today, is universal. But it is the adjustment of these different things that is important; it is the balance between all these things, and if one does not get a proper balance one gets nothing, nothing worthwhile.

In my particular business we had our labour problems. We appreciated these problems, we accepted these problems, and we turned the whole business over to labour to operate; that is what they are doing with it today. I do not see how one could be more, do more, to give something than to actually turn one's business over to labour. How can one help labour except to give them everything that they can have and more; give them the works.

Mr. MacDonald: The voice of Liberalism rampant.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): His actions speak louder than his words; he did a very commendable thing.

Mr. Chapple: I think my words have been interpreted in the right manner, and speak for themselves.

I would like to get around to another problem which I feel is important. This is the problem of agriculture. It was stated by the hon. Minister the other day in his estimates that the farmer's lot was being improved, that the farmer was doing a better job and that he was being paid better for it, and he was much more successful than he had been in the past. However, I would like to quote this particular clipping from the Financial Post which says:

NET FARM INCOME DOWN
24 PER CENT

Although the cash income received by farmers in 1961 was at a record of $2,929 million, adjustments for lower farm inventories of grain and livestock and increasing costs reduce their net income to $1,006 million compared to $1,319 million for 1960.

The lot of the farmer is not improving when it comes down to his net worth, and his net worth is the only criterion I feel on which he can be judged. It is very unfortunate; if we do not make it possible for the farmer to make a good living, the costs of our agricultural products are going to rise so high that it will affect all of us.

When the prices of our farm products go down, there is a surplus on the market; the farmer has to accept such a small amount for his produce that he cannot continue in business. If he does not continue in business it is automatic that the price of the product will go up because in this particular case scarcities will develop. But not only the development of scarcities aggravate this problem; if there are scarcities and if the price of our agricultural products do go up, then products from all over the world will come in to almost eliminate the farmer's place in this province.

Well, we must do all we can for the benefit of the consumer, for the benefit of ourselves; do all we can to assist, make it possible, for the farmer to get a worthwhile price for the products he sells, a price which will cover the cost of his operations and make it possible for him to continue as a farmer and in the type of life that farming does entail. We are actually getting nowhere on this particular thing; nothing has been devised yet to make it possible for the farmers in this province to make a worthwhile living. A farmer is either a farmer making a worthwhile living, or he is a farmer getting by as best he can, generally with some extra job to keep his farm in operation.

Now as far as the problem of Hydro is concerned, I would like to dwell on that a little. I am sure the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) would be hearing what I have to say on this.

The hon. Minister has come up with three lovely bills to amalgamate all Hydro operations. This is a very interesting thing, but why was it that Hydro was allowed to divide into two or three different parts in the first place? The Hydro commission had made a decision that it was too complicated, cost too much money as far as development operations by the original Hydro commission were concerned. As this was going to happen, they had a separate division set up to look after the costs of the new properties, which were the eastern and western divisions. These two divisions, of course, were known as northern properties.

What were the advantages and disadvantages? The advantage of having it divided into two areas were so that the rates could be kept at a minimum in southern Ontario, and the costs involved in the northern properties could be separate. This is fine; it was a very good move but financially, on the part of the Hydro commission, it meant that they were not tied up too much and they could borrow a great many more million dollars than they would have otherwise.

Since it was separate the people of northwestern Ontario, because of this separation, found it possible to get a better connection, a better working agreement by dealing with the government direct, than they could by dealing with the Hydro commission itself. This is the reason why, in northwestern Ontario, we wanted the properties separate, Mr. Speaker; this was the thing that was important to us.

All of a sudden Hydro wants to bring the whole thing together. It is just apparently a paper entry; I do not know why it means so much to Hydro; I cannot really understand because they can do this whole job without having bills to bring the thing together.

Mr. MacDonald: Did the original resolution not come from the northwestern OMEA?

Mr. Chapple: Well, whether it did or whether it did not makes no difference. I do not see why these technicalities should be brought up by the—I have great difficulty in pronouncing that name or initials because I get them, I will not say—

An hon member: The NDP party, or the "new Dems."

Mr. Chapple: Well, if I call them the New Democrats, which the hon. leader of the party advises, I cannot understand this because we are all democrats here. Why is he being any different from anybody else?

Mr. Singer: Tell him about the six people in York Centre who came to listen to Stanley Knowles the other night.

Mr. Chapple: The big problem in this regard is the fact that Hydro finds itself under terrific pressure. The pressure is so great that they have to find every way and means of covering the situation as much as they possibly can. So they cover it all and hide it away and put it in one nice little basket and use the public relations people to say everything is okay with Hydro. This is fine, but it is certainly not only getting away from the facts, but it is really covering them, call it what they like.

What is this going to mean for the people of Ontario? Around $1.5 billion is already on the books for Hydro and we do not know if Hydro is going to develop the policy of economically operating hydro; we do not know if they are going to do this or not. We have no indication from the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) that he is going to pull this thing together, that he is not going to demand more millions for more development in northeastern Ontario. We do know this. I asked a particular question—and I thought it was a good question at the time—and I did not get an answer as far as I know in any publication that has been brought out since. The answer has not come out.

I do know that the hon. Minister and his henchman at the head of the lakes said that the costs would be over $1 million as far as the straight operation of the area is concerned because of the expansion of the plant on the island near Fort William and this would continue on until the whole costs of the operation would be paid. They knew this, they published this, but they did not tell us the one fact that I would like to know and that is: what did the plant cost in the first place?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I am sorry, what is the specific question on the information for which the hon. member is looking?

An hon. member: What did the plant cost?

Mr. Chapple: The plant was supposed to cost $26 million, as far as the original estimate was concerned.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes.

Mr. Chapple: I asked a direct question in committee to one of the men who was there representing Hydro, who was supposed to know the facts and he said he would not tell me because he did not know the facts. Now, how Hydro cannot know—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Just a moment. Is the hon. member saying that some Hydro officials said up there that they did not know the facts?

Mr. Singer: Stand up to him. He is out of order. The hon. member is making the speech.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Chapple: If the hon. Minister is going to answer now.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. I said: could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Chapple: I would be very interested in hearing the question.

An hon. member: Leave him alone.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The question I am asking the hon. member is: did he say some official of Hydro told him they did not know the answer to some question that he had asked him? What official was that?

Mr. Chapple: Does the hon. Minister want me to answer that question? The reason I may that remark is because maybe he might not like the answer. However, in this particular committee room, I think it was at the beginning of this session, one of the first anyway—no, it was not, it was at the end of last session.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What is the gentleman's name? That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. Chapple: Many of the Hydro gentlemen have peculiar names, but this particular one, I cannot remember his name.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Was this in the committee—the energy committee?

Mr. Chapple: It was in the committee. He said at that time—and our hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) was right beside me when I asked this question. He was an official of Hydro, one of the important officials or he would not have been there, I do not think, he told me at that time that they had not enough information concerning the cost of this building to be able to even intimate a possible total amount as far as the cost of the plant was concerned. At that time he did not know; why did he not know? Surely there are enough Hydro officials in Hydro to be able to at least estimate a partial cost; and when I asked him if he would be prepared to give me an approximate cost, he said "No."

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member asks these difficult questions.

Mr. Chapple: When it comes to Hydro, we might say it is no laughing matter. It depends on how serious we consider Hydro costs, as well as the development or real worth of this province. These extra costs, the costs of these new developments that are being brought out here in northwestern Ontario and northeastern Ontario, the big plants that are operating more or less according to demand, force the rates up; and if Hydro had been more economical in its thinking, in its forethought—of course, the whole thing goes right back to this government. The government at no time ever questioned Hydro. Hydro was never questioned. They could go out and spend anything they want; their ideas never came to the floor of the House; nothing was questioned at any time as far as Hydro was concerned. And here we are with a situation that we cannot control at the present time because we have obligated ourselves to the terrific expenses which Hydro has placed on the people of this province.

And another comment I might like to make came out in the papers just this morning. This was the fact that Hydro is going to have a little trouble with union negotiations, which is interesting. What is going to happen if the lights are turned out all over Ontario?

It is rather an interesting thing to think about, I gather. I am not suggesting that the lights will be turned out at nights, I am suggesting that the lights will be turned out through the 24-hour period.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: All the lights in the province?

Mr. Chapple: All the lights will go out.

Mr. Chapple moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that when this House adjourn at the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until 2 o'clock on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will meet at 2 o'clock and go on with the estimates of The Department of Highways, and a night session. We will have night sessions on Tuesday night and Thursday night.

An hon. member: If the lights do not go out.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) give us more information about the particular estimates that will be called in the balance of next week? The Department of Highways has been identified for Monday but what about the other several days?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The Department of Energy Resources, and at present that is all.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Those two?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. If there is any change I will give the hon. members all the notice possible.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.05 of the clock, p.m.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on Bill No. 47, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961, be discharged and that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the standing committee on public accounts for consideration.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I might just say, Mr. Speaker, that I have spoken to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). This is carrying out my undertaking with respect to the hon. leader of the Opposition's proposals regarding what revenue would be produced by the sales tax with his amendments and what comments I had to make on what the amount would be.

I undertook to put that matter before the public accounts committee. I am using this method of doing it. It will be dealt with by the committee next Monday.

I have discussed this with the hon. leader of the Opposition, as I told him I would give him some notice in order that he could bring his people together.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Before the orders of the day, I have a short statement I would like to present to the House in connection with the winter works programme involving The Department of Lands and Forests.

By agreement with the federal government our parks branch has been able to substantially expand its park development programme during the winter works programme. This, I think, is an effective measure for providing employment in a great many areas extending from southwestern Ontario right across the province to the northwest. I might add that with the location of many parks in those parts of Ontario where there is normally less opportunity for winter employment, this development work does provide a useful outlet for constructive use of manpower in these more or less remote areas.

The total extent of work accomplished is substantial. It involves the many ramifications of facilities required to serve the public, such as camp and picnic ground development, park roads and trails, boat launching and dockages, fire hazard clearances, tree planting, nature trails and so on. I would also add that these winter work projects are in line with our park plans and designs.

The federal government has recently announced that this programme of assisting in winter works projects has been extended to May 31 of this year. The funds provided for these purposes will reach a total of about $1.3 million, over half of which covers pay-rolls for those employed on the job. The balance is for hire and operation of construction equipment and material necessary for carrying on the work. The federal contribution is 50 per cent of expenditures, provided one half of the total expenditure is for labour. Preliminary estimates indicate that about 60,000 man-days of labour will be realized up to the end of May. This extension to May 31 will provide us in Lands and Forests with the opportunity to complete many projects after the spring break-up, and at the same time provide useful work for many people.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): May I ask the hon. Minister a question following that announcement? If this project is in effect next year, will he see that some of the UNR funds are used in access roads rather than just in parks only, because I understand now that most of it goes to parks and very little to access roads.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to answer the hon. member's question. I do not think his question relates to what I was speaking about at all.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) presented to the House the following:

The report of the hon. Minister of Public Works, Ontario (Mr. Connell), for the 12 months ending March 31, 1961.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have two questions which I would like to address to the appropriate hon. Ministers, copies of which I have submitted to them through you.

The first one is to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts): in view of the misgivings expressed by Hydro spokesmen and the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) on the question of a national power grid, would the hon. Prime Minister indicate to the House what the general stand of the Ontario government will be at the interprovincial conference meeting in Ottawa on this proposal?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I checked and I was unable to find any misgivings expressed by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay). However, the meeting is taking place today in Ottawa and there are three principal questions that are being considered at this meeting. The first is the general advantages which might be derived from regional and inter-regional, and under certain circumstances international, intercommunication of electrical facilities. The second question will be the principal problems involved in long-distance transmission and what might be done to meet them. The third question is the role which the federal and provincial governments could play in the planning, research and development which would be required in order to obtain the greatest possible benefit to the provinces and to the country as a whole.

The whole subject matter is so broad, and this is what might be termed only the beginning of a beginning, that the government has no particular position on the matter at this stage, other than we are prepared to investigate, along with our sister provinces that are interested and the federal government, the whole question in order to see exactly what is involved including both disadvantages and advantages. In other words, the present meeting is entirely exploratory and any policy, any government policy, will have to await the settlement of many questions which I indicated are being discussed there today.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will not abuse the rules of the House now but I am surprised at the comment of the hon. Prime Minister that he is not aware of any misgivings, as the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, on a number of occasions, in the public prints and in the committee on energy, has expressed serious misgivings with regard to economic feasibility.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That may be so.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender). Will the hon. Minister of Labour indicate the reasons for continued delays in introducing the bill to provide more effective industrial safety legislation, and when can this legislation be expected?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I say in reply, the question was not worded in that way. As I got the question, it said: "Delay in not introducing the bill to provide more effective industrial legislation."

Mr. MacDonald: Industrial safety legislation.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is not the way I got it, Mr. Speaker. However, assuming that he meant it in relation to industrial safety, I wanted to make this statement: the hon. member will recall that shortly after the session commenced last November an amendment to The Department of Labour Act was passed and received Royal assent. This amendment established the Labour Safety Council of Ontario and the members of the council were appointed on December 21, 1961. The council met on January 8, for the first time.

A Construction Safety Act was drafted and submitted in preliminary form to the council for its consideration and advice. This proposed Act is in the final stages of drafting.

I have not given notice of introduction of the bill because of the fact that the report of the Royal commission on the construction industry will likely be available before long and it will be as well to consider its references to safety in that industry, if there should be any, before introducing the bill.

As I said about a week ago in the House, I hope that we will soon have the bill before the House. I am sure that the hon. member will agree that it should be introduced in the light of all pertinent material available in respect of its subject-matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: are we assured that the Goldenberg report will be down, so that we can be certain that this will be coming in this session?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I would say to the hon. member that matters in respect of the Goldenberg report will be coming in this session.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the Goldenberg report has been made to the hon. Minister or his office?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The Goldenberg report has been made, Mr. Speaker, and is now being studied by myself and by members of my department. It is in the process of being printed, and as soon as it is available it will be presented to the hon. members of the House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And when can the hon. members expect it?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will arrange that it be distributed as soon as it is available and when we have enough copies. There is no question of holding it back. It will be in here as soon as we get it in. It might take a week or so to have a sufficient number of copies printed in order to make a complete distribution.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like, on behalf of all the hon. members of the House, to express our sympathy to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) who suffered such a very serious tragedy in his personal family life over the weekend. I think that some of the hon. members who are not here today are attending the funeral in Brantford and I would simply like to express the sympathy of the House to Mr. Gordon and the remaining members of his family in this very great tragedy that befell them.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair, and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to. House in committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, presenting the estimates of The Department of Highways for the first time, I do it with a sense of humility, realizing the calibre of the two of my colleagues who are my predecessors as the Minister of Highways. I refer to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass).

I have had copies of this address placed on the desks of the hon. members because I realize that many hon. members are much better readers than I am; not only that, perhaps they can get more out of it by reading it than they would get out of my delivery.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I think the hon. Minister is to be commended on doing this.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: As a matter of fact, it was not my intention that the speech would be distributed until just as I was beginning, because now it is possibly going to be old stuff for a few of the hon. members.

Mr. Chairman, before settling down to the presentation of my estimates, I wish to record here in this House my pleasure in finding such a high degree of efficiency and esprit de corps throughout all levels of my new department.

In an address such as this it is customary to review briefly some of the major construction either completed, or on which the department had work in progress in 1961. Because of the magnitude of the over-all programme it is possible to touch on only a few of the highlights. I am confident that any of the hon. members who travelled over Ontario's highways in 1961 have ample evidence of the breadth of the department's programme of new construction, reconstruction and maintenance over the past year. Indeed, to go into detail would require far more time than I should take from a busy Legislature.

During the year, 75 miles of Highway No. 401 were completed and opened to traffic. With this addition, more than 377 miles of trans-provincial Highway 401 are now in use. The sections which were opened during 1961, from west to east, were: Tilbury by-pass, five miles; Highway No. 2 (Eastwood) to Highway No. 8 (Preston), 25 miles; Highway No. 28 (Port Hope) to Highway No. 30 (Brighton), 28 miles; Odessa to Highway No. 38 (Kingston), seven miles; and from Highway No. 16 to Iroquois, 10 miles.

As 1961 came to an end, construction was in progress on practically every uncompleted mile of Highway No. 401, and within the next few weeks we propose to award the last grading contract on this highway from Windsor to the Quebec border.

The widening of the Queen Elizabeth Way to six lanes from Highway No. 27 to Highway No. 10 was completed in December. In the late summer, work began on widening a further section west from Highway No. 10 to the Mississauga Road.

Work continues on the province's second skyway, located near St. Catharines, which will carry the Queen Elizabeth Way over the Welland Canal. When completed, the Homer Skyway will eliminate the last bottleneck on the Queen Elizabeth Way.

The second stage of the $35 million Ottawa Queensway, from the combined interchanges for Carling and Kirkwood avenues to the western Ottawa city limits—a little better than four miles—was opened October 2. Completion of the 10-mile Ottawa Queensway is scheduled for 1965. The Queensway forms part of the main Trans-Canada route through the province but is being constructed under a separate agreement with the federal government, The Department of Highways, the city of Ottawa and the National Capital Commission.

On the main Ontario route of the Trans-Canada highway, more than 212 miles of existing highway were reconstructed to meet or better standards set for this highway by the federal government, and 12 new bridges were completed and opened to traffic.

Along the 1,453-mile main route of the Trans-Canada highway, major projects were in progress at many points. Going from east to west, some of these were: completion of the second stage of the Ottawa Queensway, which I have mentioned; the completion of a $1 million grading and granular base job or the first stage of the reconstruction of Trans-Canada Highway 7 from Sharbot creek west for 10 miles; the seven-mile Peterborough by-pass and the Cambridge diversion on Trans-Canada Highway 12, north of Beaverton. Farther north, on Trans-Canada Highway 69, 33 miles of new highway, with a paved surface, were put in service.

Between Sault Ste. Marie and Havilland Bay on Trans-Canada Highway 17, 25 miles of new highway were paved and placed in service. Continuing north and west from the Soo, around Lake Superior on Trans-Canada Highway 17, reconstruction of a continuous stretch of 55 miles, from Schreiber to Nipigon, was completed in 1961.

West of Nipigon, on Trans-Canada Highway 17, by the end of August paving had been completed over 20 miles of new highway between Ouimet and a point opposite Amethyst Station. Toward the end of the year the same highway was reconstructed east from Port Arthur for eight and a half miles.

Between Fort William and the Manitoba boundary, 87 miles of Trans-Canada Highway 17 were under construction during the past year. Of this total, paving was completed on 50 miles and work continues on the remaining 37 miles.

My reason for going into as much detail as I have—with respect to work on the main route of the Trans-Canada highway—is to emphasize the magnitude of the work and the accompanying expenditures which the government, through The Department of Highways, is carrying out, particularly in northwestern Ontario, on this important trans-provincial route. It is worth observing here that the cost of the reconstruction of a 16-mile section of Highway No. 17 between Cavers Hill—some 33 miles east of Nipigon—and the eastern end of the Selim diversion, which was completed this past year, works out to $229,000 per mile. For purposes of comparison, the average cost per mile of two-lane Trans-Canada highway in southern Ontario has been approximately $100,000.

It is pertinent to note here that, of the total of 212 miles which The Department of Highways reconstructed to Trans-Canada highway standards along the 1,453-mile route of the Trans-Canada highway in Ontario in 1961, more than 150 miles are located between Sault Ste. Marie and the Manitoba boundary.

While the cost of building completely new sections and reconstructing existing sections of Trans-Canada Highway 17 throughout northwestern Ontario—to close the former 165-mile gap between the Agawa river and Marathon was a $40 million project in itself—has been staggering, we were gratified in the great increase in traffic on the Canadian section of the increasingly popular Lake Superior circle route in 1961, the first full tourist season since the gap was closed. Traffic between Sault Ste. Marie and the Lakehead, and from there south to the international border at Pigeon river on Highway No. 61 was, in 1961, double that of any previous year.

In this connection, I am pleased to report the completion last fall of a new international bridge at Pigeon river, the cost of which was shared equally by the department and the Minnesota state highways department. The new structure, with new approaches on an improved alignment, cannot help but make a most favourable impression on the great number of people entering Canada at this point, the western end of the 500-mile long Canadian portion of the Lake Superior circle route.

At Fort Frances, good progress was made on the spectacular Rainy Lake Causeway on Highway No. 11. The causeway itself is scheduled for completion late this year.

The paving of 53 miles of Highway No. 11 between Hearst and Kapuskasing in 1961 marked the completion of the department's sustained programme over several years to pave the entire 267 miles between Longlac and Cochrane. A new 900-foot bridge to carry Highway No. 11 over the Missinaibi river at Mattice, west of Hearst, costing more than $750,000, was opened last October. This bridge represents the accomplishment of the department's long-term programme to replace all major structures on Highway No. 11 between Longlac and Porquis Junction.

Immediately south of Cochrane work was in progress in 1961 on the reconstruction of 22 miles of Highway No. 11. A little further south, new pavement was laid on Highway No. 11 from a point just north of Porquis Junction south for eight miles, the work being completed last April. In September a new structure over the Black river at Matheson was put in service. Still farther south, the reconstruction of Highway No. 11 between Englehart and Earleton was brought to the stage in 1961 where a base course of pavement could be laid. May saw completion of the extensive improvements to Highway No. 11 between Earleton and New Liskeard, including the Earleton by-pass.

Between New Liskeard and Latchford, south of Cobalt, work on the multi-million dollar tri-town by-pass made such good progress that grading of the first six miles of the 12-mile route has been completed.

The projects to which I have referred are convincing proof of the scale of improvement, on a continuing basis, which the department has been carrying out on the 625 miles of Highway No. 11 between North Bay and Nipigon that provides the northern route of the Trans-Canada highway through Ontario.

In the Timmins area, the extension of Highway No. 101 west through the wilderness for 60 miles to reach Chapleau, is open and gravelling will be done in the spring, with an official opening planned for June, 1962.

Although construction and maintenance on Trans-Canada Highway 17 and other King's Highways represent the major expenditure on road building, significant projects were under way on roads-to-resources and forest access roads. These roads play an important part in the economy of the district, not only in opening up new areas, rich in natural resources and scenic beauty, to industry and tourists but also by employing local labour in their construction.

The Spruce river road, running north from King's Highway No. 17 just east of Port Arthur is one of the roads being built under the roads-to-resources programme. Already 56 miles of this road have been completed, and clearing the right-of-way for an additional 8.5 miles is now under way.

Construction of another resources road from Savant lake south to connect with Trans-Canada Highway 17, in the vicinity of Ignace, has continued during the year. The 15 miles immediately south from Savant lake has been completed and the construction of an additional 13 miles, as well as construction of a bridge over the Sturgeon river, is progressing according to schedule.

As the examples which I have cited bear witness, The Department of Highways again in 1961 made a most impressive contribution to the economic growth of northern and north-western Ontario through a great expansion of the highway system.

I shall conclude my tabling of some of the highlights of the highway programme in northern and northwestern Ontario in 1961, with the observation that the changes which have been wrought on the King's Highways in that part of Ontario in the past few years would, less than a decade ago, have been considered desirable but well beyond achievement in so short a period of time.

Time does not permit a similar examination of highway construction in other regions of this far-flung province and so I shall refer only to some of the freeway construction. In southern Ontario the major emphasis in 1961 was to continue the accelerated programme on Highway No. 401 and progress was excellent. On Highway No. 401 alone we completed 77 miles of grading, 75 miles of paving and 47 structures.

Work continued on the section of a new controlled-access Highway No. 403 which will pass through and around Hamilton, the section know locally as the Chedoke Expressway. For some months now, work has also been under way on the section from the Queen Elizabeth Way, in the Burlington area, west to connect with the Hamilton section, in the vicinity of Highway No. 6.

Construction is progressing well on Highway No. 405, a high-speed freeway to connect the new international bridge between Queens-ton and Lewiston with the Queen Elizabeth Way.

To summarize the work done in 1961 throughout the province, these are the vital statistics: Capital contracts were completed on 611 miles of grading, 506 miles of paving, and 103 structures—96 of which are already in service.

During 1961 a total of 168 miles of roads of various types were incorporated into the provincial highway system. These roads, previously under the jurisdiction of local authorities, were assumed by The Department of Highways to improve and extend our provincial highway network. In many instances an increasing volume of traffic on these routes placed a heavy maintenance burden on the municipalities concerned.

The most notable among the roads assumed were: the 37 miles of county road between Winchester and Smiths Falls, which became part of Highway No. 43; the 25 miles of county road between Highway No. 3 at Courtland and Long Point provincial park became part of Highway No. 59, and Highway No. 60 was extended 17 miles east from Eganville to Highway No. 17.

The summary which I have given of highway construction in the year now ending leaves unmentioned, as I have indicated, a much greater number of projects than those to which I have referred. This therefore seems to be a fitting point at which to report that since 1945 the department has improved in one way or another 88 per cent of all King's highway mileage. That is, the mileage in existence today which has not been either built as new mileage, reconstructed or resurfaced since 1945 represents only 12 per cent of the total.

Maintenance of Ontario's 12,000 miles of King's Highways and secondary highways remains one of the department's most challenging and complex jobs. The assumption of 168 miles of road, to which I have just referred, coupled with the natural growth in mileage through new construction each year—particularly the new four-lane sections of Highway No. 401—means an ever-increasing work load for the maintenance crews. Without going into detail, I need only point out that the mileage of multi-lane King's Highways snow-plowed this winter is 740 miles, compared with 577 only the winter before—an increase of more than 25 per cent. The mileage of two-lane highways being maintained has shown a jump from 11,509 to 11,947.

A forward step which was completed before the end of 1961 and which has already been of very great help in enabling the maintenance crews to keep up with the growing demands upon them, was the expansion of the department's own mobile radio communication system. The system now covers most of southern Ontario with about 300 mobile units. The instantaneous, on-the-spot reports which the system makes possible has year-round advantages for the department, but its benefits for motorists are greatest in the winter months because it speeds by many hours the work of winter maintenance crews in keeping the highways clear and in the safest possible travelling condition.

That the winter maintenance crews are doing a wonderful job is obvious to everyone and I here wish to congratulate them for this, as well as for their year-round performance. The combination of men devoted to their work, coupled with the finest, most modern equipment, has earned for the province a reputation for highway maintenance second to none on this continent.

I shall conclude this review by mentioning only two or three developments of importance in the field of policy during 1961. One of these was the announcement in July by my hon. predecessor that The Department of Highways, realizing the place which air travel now holds in the total transportation system of the province, planned to construct new controlled-access roads between major airports and the communities they serve. The earliest possible start will be made on new routes between Malton Airport and Metropolitan Toronto, to be followed by similar road construction between Uplands Airport in Ottawa, and at London.

In 1961 the decision to provide service areas on Highway No. 401 was made and it is expected that some of these will be in operation this year.

The Department of Highways some years ago instituted pre-qualification procedures for the purpose of expediting the work on many of our major contract awards. Now that these procedures have been in effect a sufficient length of time we are making a complete re-examination of these procedures. Far from being an indication that the procedures have not been successful—which they most definitely have—this latest step on our part is, in fact, a search for ways and means of possibly making the present procedures even more effective. I am pleased to report that to date not a single contractor who was awarded one of our pre-qualified contracts has failed to complete the contract satisfactorily.

Before giving the hon. members details of The Department of Highways programme for the coming fiscal year I should like to draw to their attention the fact that the net expenditures—after allowing for estimated refunds—for which we are budgeting, will be $7,994,000 more than the estimated total for all sources of revenue which will be made available to The Department of Highways in the same period. These sources include the collection of the gasoline tax, the issuing of motor vehicle permits and licenses, the motor vehicle fuel tax—diesel—and miscellaneous sources, such as property sales. Total estimated revenue is $256,306,000, almost $8 million less than our estimated net expenditure.

There is just not sufficient money available for The Department of Highways to do all the new construction as well as reconstruction desirable unless the provincial debt is to increase beyond all reasonable limits.

We are proposing a gross expenditure of $274.8 million and estimated refunds of $10.5 million from Trans-Canada highway and other agreements, leaving an estimated net expenditure of $264.3 million.

The table below provides a comparison of the estimates for the forthcoming fiscal year with the one just ending.

We are raising our municipal assistance by almost $9 million—from a net now estimated at $81,190,000 for the fiscal year ending—to an estimated $90,085,000. This increase follows an upward trend which has continued since 1957. In that period not only have the amounts increased considerably but they have also increased in terms of the percentage of our net total expenditure.

Another significant trend is that each year the total annual expenditures by the municipalities on road construction and maintenance keep getting closer to the net expenditure by The Department of Highways for its own highways. The climb upward has come from 70.5 per cent for 1957-1958 to an estimated 97.5 per cent for the coming fiscal year. It is estimated that for the 1962-1963 fiscal year the municipalities will spend—including the subsidies from the department—no less than $169,697,000, compared to the department's estimated net expenditure of $174,215,000 on King's highways proper; that is, before allowing for municipal assistance and other additional amounts.

An Appendix A attached to copies of this address—see page 1245—provides in tabular form, figures to show the types of comparison I have mentioned.

The trend to urbanization in many parts of Ontario is evident on all sides. Many areas have doubled their population since World War II, while others have multiplied almost beyond recognition. What is not so evident is the strain which this expansion has placed on the roads and streets and, of course, the financial resources of the communities concerned. Many roads under municipal jurisdiction are now carrying daily traffic loads well above those found on a number of our King's highways.

What has been happening in the urban centres is also taking place in the rural areas and the government is aware of the ever-increasing load being borne by many rural roads. These roads must be built to, and maintained at, a high standard to promote economic growth and to keep pace with greatly increased traffic—for example, the growing number of school buses which travel an ever-greater number of miles each year. It has been truly observed that many a rural-appearing township road has become, of necessity, a high-capacity road differing in designation only from the highest standard of King's highways.

King's Highway — capital	$ 135,552,000	$ 144,105,000
King's Highway — maintenance	45,153,000	44,526,000
Municipal assistance	90,085,000	85,335,000
Head office expense	4,010,000	3,974,000
Gross expenditure	$ 274,800,000	$ 277,940,000
Less: Refunds	10,500,000	10,000,000
Net expenditure	$ 264,300,000	$ 267,940,000

There is a financial limit to what the municipalities can do to try to cope with their road and street problems, notwithstanding the fact that the department does assist them very substantially indeed. The Department of Highways is well aware of their difficulties and wants to assist them in every way possible to the end that roads at all levels of municipal jurisdiction will be adequate to the traffic using them. Roads and streets, wherever they may be, have a vital function in the total transportation needs of Ontario.

In the summer of 1961 The Department of Highways set in motion a special study project to make an exhaustive review of fiscal policies for highways, roads and streets throughout Ontario. Working in close co-operation with the provincial Departments of Economics, Municipal Affairs and Transport, the department has solicited the opinion of all the many interested bodies in the province. Thus the research project will have a basis sufficiently broad to bring out all pertinent facts. Municipal financing, as it pertains to road and street construction, will be subjected to a most painstaking examination. It is expected that these studies will point the way to new approaches for the financing of highways, roads and streets and offer a measure of relief to the hard-pressed municipalities.

It is anticipated that those directing the study project which I have just described, will be in a position to make a preliminary report this spring. One critical problem on which it is hoped progress can be made before too long is the matter of sections of King's highways passing through or around urban centres, particularly with regard to controlled-access highways, and the financing of them. The department is equally concerned with the municipalities to find solutions in this sphere which will be mutually satisfactory.

The implications of the special study of the financing of highways, roads and streets now in progress, are so far-reaching that I wish to commend the man whose idea it was, a man who has been in the vanguard of so many progressive procedures in highway engineering, the Deputy Minister of Highways, Mr. W. J. Fulton. Since coming to this department as Deputy Minister, Bill Fulton has been a tower of strength to me, as he was to those who came before me. I do not think I could do better than quote from the remarks that were made on the occasion when the Deputy Minister, last September, was awarded an honorary life-membership in the Canadian Good Roads Association in recognition of his 40 years of long and dedicated service in the development of Ontario's highways:

If you want to see a tangible testimony to the effectiveness with which he has worked, take a look at the tremendous system of highways in the province of Ontario. . . . More than any other man, Bill Fulton has been responsible for the planning of them.

One aspect of our budgeted expenditures in the field of municipal assistance, which I wish to underline, is the increase of $1 million for the construction of development roads, marking a new high of $9 million, compared with the previous total of $8 million. This increase means that greater expenditures on development roads can also be expected in the years to follow because of the fact that the new work begun in 1962 will be mainly pre-engineering.

The basic concept of development roads is that The Department of Highways, on a 100 per cent basis, undertakes to improve local road systems materially throughout the province where such work cannot be financed by the local authorities. In most cases, the work involves improving existing sections of county or township roads, rather than the construction of an entirely new road.

The stepping-up of our programme of development road construction is another instance of the department's concern that the greatest possible total mileage of roads of all types will provide the maximum service in all parts of Ontario.

The year 1962 may well come to be regarded in later years as one which marked a turning point in the drawing closer of the municipal road jurisdictions and The Department of Highways—for reasons which are all around us. Not only are the physical requirements for roads increasing at a rate never before experienced, but the techniques of road building and maintenance are becoming increasingly complex and varied. In fact, one problem constantly confronting The Department of Highways is that of finding the best means by which this mass of engineering and technical knowledge can be passed on to the municipal road authorities, in ways which will be of the greatest practical assistance to them so that they can gain from the specialized knowledge of many fields acquired by this department's engineers.

There is no doubt in my mind that the adoption of many of these new techniques by the municipalities will enable them to obtain the best possible results from the funds available to them. We realize that many of the techniques of which I speak are not applicable to all municipal jurisdictions, but we are equally sure that many of them could be adopted by a large number of municipalities.

Since the proof of the pudding is in the eating, The Department of Highways has decided to carry out in the very near future some actual demonstration projects of some of the new practices and techniques on carefully selected township roads. Owing primarily to geographical factors which affect construction costs, construction techniques vary throughout the province. Nevertheless, some of these new methods have wide application within fairly large areas in different parts of Ontario. For this reason, I do not feel it is necessary to carry out very many such demonstration projects, nor does it require doing so over any substantial length of road. The department will supervise and pay in full for the actual construction required to demonstrate the new techniques.

The department has been working much more closely in recent years with the municipalities to help them in many ways other than the financing of their respective programmes. An excellent example is our co-operation in assisting many of them to solve, in part at least, some of the pressing traffic problems which confront them. The department has encouraged many municipalities, both individually and, in some cases, on a regional basis, to undertake traffic studies. In addition to subsidies of up to 75 per cent for such studies—when carried out in a manner approved by the department—we also provide, when requested, expert technical personnel.

The response to our offer has been most heartening. It is our conviction that only through proper and overall planning of this type—having regard to the complete transportation requirements of any given area and the various forms of transportation available, such as public transit—can adequate road systems be provided without duplication and at minimum cost.

Very recently the department began to implement the final stage of the integration of its municipal roads branch with the King's highway or operations branch, the result of which will be that the district municipal engineer will now be directly responsible to the district engineer. In effect this means that the district engineer will now be concerned with the projects being planned or currently in progress in the municipalities within his district administration—and not only King's highway work as formerly. This move holds many advantages for the municipalities and it is expected that more and more of them will avail themselves of engineering and technical assistance through our 18 district offices.

I wish to stress the point that the integration I have described had, as one of its principal motives, the objective of making still more assistance available to the municipalities, with no intention whatsoever of imposing some measure of control on them. We have experts, some of them leaders in their field on this continent, for soils analysis and a whole host of highly specialized forms of road engineering, and we hope that the municipalities will call upon these skills, for the benefit of all concerned.

I have, admittedly, gone to unusual length in my remarks to point up the change in road requirements—that is, roads of all types, and not the King's highways alone—which we are witnessing in the province. At a time like this we might well ask ourselves, "What direction should the highway programme, as a whole, be taking?" It is my conviction that we should consider the importance of roads from the standpoint of the service they perform five days—or even better, seven days—a week, 52 weeks of the year, rather than how they accommodate heavy week-end traffic to the resort areas or other "once-a-week" places.

There is, however, one significant change in the year's capital construction programme about which there is no question at all: the decision to complete, as quickly as possible, several projects which we have been attacking on a more gradual schedule until now. In the past, simply in an effort to get under way as many as possible of the projects most urgently needed, we have, at times, spread some of these over a number of years. We feel, at the present time, that some of these should be completed as soon as possible so that the roads may serve the purposes for which they were intended. The most notable of these are: the completion of Highway No. 11 between Atikokan and Fort Frances; the extension of Highway No. 101 from Chapleau to Wawa on Trans-Canada Highway 17; and the speedy completion of the reconstruction of Highway No. 68 from Espanola to Little Current. Work on all these projects has been under way for some time, but our 1962-1963 programme has been scheduled to ensure their completion at the earliest possible date. I have described the speedup as a "crash" programme and that is just what it is. This policy will guide our future planning.

Before outlining briefly some of the more notable projects on the new programme I wish to say once more that we cannot do everything at once. I notice, for example, that we are carrying forward work on 176 capital contracts, almost exactly the same as the 174 we carried forward into the year ending March 31.

With respect to the work we have planned for northern and northwestern Ontario—that is, everything north of North Bay—I should point out that the value of the new work we plan to award will be greater this year than last. Looking farther ahead, we have already planned work for the 1963-1964 programme which we anticipate will be still higher in dollar value.

The annual level of expenditure in each of our 18 districts is not, and cannot be, either stable or constantly rising. It is definitely the case that there is an ebb and flow in southern Ontario as there is in the other parts of the province, which is what we would expect when we consider the nature of highway construction. At the height of a major project, such as the closing of the gap on Trans-Canada Highway No. 17 north of Sault Ste. Marie, there are, obviously, higher than normal expenditures earmarked for that single project over several years. Once it is completed, it takes time before a similar stage is reached on other projects which compare in magnitude. The same situation has been duplicated on Highway No. 401. Once the route has been completed over the full distance it will not require the annual expenditures we are making now to complete four lanes on sections where there are now only two lanes.

The programme which I am presenting ensures continuation of the improvement of the King's highways, dispersed equitably throughout the province, and the same high standard of maintenance for which the department is justly noted.

There will be an acceleration of the work on several special projects in northern and northwestern Ontario, which I have previously detailed. In southern Ontario emphasis will be placed on the section of Highway No. 403 from the Queen Elizabeth Way to the western limits of Hamilton and a start will be made on the Brantford by-pass section of this freeway. Work will be carried forward on Highway No. 405 from the site of the new international bridge at Queenston to the Queen Elizabeth Way, and on the Homer Skyway over the Welland canal.

Construction will get underway on a four-lane, controlled-access highway, No. 58, within the city of St. Catharines. When completed, this trunkline highway will connect the major population centres along the Welland canal from Port Colborne to the Queen Elizabeth Way at St. Catharines.

Considerable work will be done on the Trans-Canada highway to bring more miles up to standard; and the third stage of the Ottawa Queensway section of this highway will have several contracts in progress.

Other special projects are the widening of Dixon Road to four lanes between Highway No. 27 and the new Toronto International Airport at Malton and a new, multi-lane, controlled-access route from the Renforth Drive interchange on Highway No. 401 to the same airport.

We plan to open 89 miles of Highway No. 401, which will bring the total miles in service to 466 by the end of 1962 and make possible a through drive from Cornwall to Highway No. 76, west of London.

Construction of the first phase of widening sections of the Toronto by-pass section of Highway No. 401—from the Hogg's Hollow bridge to Avenue Road—will get underway, as well as the widening of structures between Avenue Road and the CNR line, just east of Keele Street.

Questions have been raised in connection with the department's decision to pave only two lanes on some sections of Highway No. 401 instead of doing all four at one time. In the hope of clarifying this matter once and for all, I wish to state that the department's primary concern from the beginning has been to put in service a paved surface over the full 510-mile route of Highway No. 401 at the earliest possible date. In order to meet our promise of achieving this objective in 1963 we have had to build several sections on which only two lanes have been paved. However, let me assure the House that paving operations will continue without interruption until four lanes are completed over the entire length of Highway No. 401.

The programme which I am tabling in this House has, like the ones which have preceded it, been most painstakingly assembled, having in mind the funds available and the urgency of the specific projects which survived the final selection. The yardstick has been the measurement of the contribution which each project of new highway construction will make in promoting the economic growth of the province and the welfare of its people.

Copies of the capital construction programme, the municipal roads programme, and a copy of this address have been placed on the desk of each hon. member.

On vote 701:

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): I would remind the hon. Minister that his timing is somewhat out. The copies of the two volumes he spoke of have not yet been placed on hon. members' desks.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset I should like to congratulate the new hon. Minister on his very important appointment. He is personally well regarded in this House. We know he will administer his department with the same conscientious endeavour that has always characterized his work in the past. We wish him well and sincerely hope and trust that he will bring order into the administration of this very important function of government.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that there is a natural desire, when considering estimates, for us to want to be complimentary to our hon. friends opposite. Nevertheless, sir, we are reminded of our duties to this House and to the people of Ontario and, while still cast in the role of Opposition members, to our present system of government. If then, sir, the remainder of my remarks are not complimentary in a sense that the government would like, it is my hope that they will at least be courteous so that perhaps as a result of these suggestions the hon. Minister will in the years ahead make such changes as to change the tenor of any remarks that we might be persuaded to make in next year's estimates. Broadly speaking, my criticism of the government today can be classed in the following broad headings: (1) The lack of detail in the information submitted to this House, and the estimates which are still being considered; (2) The inconsistency in the amount of the estimates as related to previous estimates of the department, and as related to the study and the need for economic growth in this province; (3) The lack of order in the stated method of financing our roads, in the matter of assistance to our municipalities, and in relation to the over-all programme of roads and highways in Ontario; (4) The continuing lack of efficiency which could be eliminated by an announced, priority-rated, long-term approach to the construction of our roads, conducted on a basis of need, and free from political interference; and (5) My general observations indicating hardship to the overburdened taxpayers of Ontario, as a result of the disorder engendered by the foregoing weaknesses in government.

Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to again draw to the attention of the government the manner in which we are again being asked to vote the estimates of this department, in consideration of the very substantial amount of money that is involved.

The amount of money that we will be required to vote today will approximate 25 per cent of the entire cost of the provincial government over the next year. Over the past four years over $1 billion have been voted to The Department of Highways. It is significant, then, that these estimates are without parallel in any of the other departments when related to the amount of detail which is given to hon. members. I might stop here long enough, if I may, to commend the hon. Minister for his courtesy in making available to the hon. members an advance copy of his address. It allowed us sufficient opportunity to follow his remarks and to be familiar with his general comments this afternoon.

While I am in a congratulatory mood, I think it would be proper, on this side of the House, to congratulate the Deputy Minister on the very notable achievement which was made mention of by the hon. Minister this afternoon. We too share in that honour in congratulating him, and we are very pleased that he has been given this place of distinction. However, Mr. Chairman, I think that is about as far as I can go in congratulating the department.

Hon. members will recall that only last week we were asked to approve the expenditures of The Department of Economics and Development. The detail of those expenditures of some $12 million was broken down into 12 different votes and yet here today we are given the duty of considering the expenditure of some $265 million under only three summary headings which are completely void of detail.

The matter of the information submitted in the book entitled Capital Programme, Mr. Chairman, shows a scornful disdain for the intelligence of the hon. members of this House. The information which is available in these publications is deliberately withheld so as to make it useless for anyone who seriously wanted to examine the operations of the department. This type of procedure emanating from the hon. Minister can only leave hon. members suspicious of the motives involved, since this matter has been raised regularly by this side of the House.

If one were of a suspicious nature, Mr. Chairman, I submit that this action gives considerable scope to enlarge those suspicions. I am led to wonder just what the department is endeavouring to hide. In any event, I submit that this procedure makes it physically impossible for Opposition members to perform their function in this House, and for this the hon. Minister must assume the full responsibility.

I am speaking—and at this particular point I still have not had delivered to my desk a copy of the broad basis from which these estimates were compiled. I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and I ask the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) if in conscience they really consider that it is possible to do any type of examination of the work which is being suggested this afternoon. It consists of 165 pages in one booklet alone. The information that is contained in that booklet is necessary—it must have been necessary to compile the estimates—and yet we are not given even the scanty details that are available in the booklet until after the time has come to prepare our criticism of the government.

Mr. Chairman, it can very well be good politics to withhold this information from the House, to hamper and frustrate the Opposition in their criticism of the government. This may be good politics in that it enables the government to cover up its failures, but it is not in the best interests of the people of Ontario. It frustrates the very purpose for which we were sent here, and that is to consider the wise expenditure of taxes, to ensure that it accrues to the best interest of the people of Ontario.

Before leaving the subject, Mr. Chairman, I should like to again appeal to the hon. Prime Minister of this province to remedy this situation before another year lapses. I have been impressed by his apparent desire to improve the manner in which reports are distributed to hon. members of this House, as a result of complaints from this side of the House under the other estimates. I would respectfully draw this to his attention again today in the hope that he will remedy this unsatisfactory situation which is not conducive, I submit, to good government.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I would say that I am in agreement with the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards). I think these estimates, or the information for the whole House, should be broken down in greater detail; and it is my proposal to this House that this will be done next year.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for conceding this far. I wonder, while we are discussing it, if the hon. Minister would agree to consider the placing of the money value and further details in the Capital Programme booklet which is available to hon. members? Would he consider expanding it that far? I do not think, while dealing with the subject, that it is unreasonable for us to suggest, if the government is truly endeavouring to bring about the wisest expenditure of the tax fund, that it be brought out into the open so that it can be fully criticized by the Opposition. It is true that our responsibilities are to be critical, but only in the effectiveness of that criticism will the taxpayers of the province benefit.

As we look around the province we see great construction taking place within The Department of Highways, and yet we are frustrated when we endeavour to find out whether or not the actual carrying out of that construction works to the best benefit of the taxpayers. I shall have some further questions to put to the hon. Minister with respect to these matters later on, but I do thank him for this concession. It is my hope that he will be sufficiently informative so as to enable us to do our job effectively.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, while we are on this subject, I would not want the hon. member to take all the credit because I might say that the estimates were prepared for this budget before I took office. I pointed out to the hon. Prime Minister in the month of December that I thought the estimates were too scanty as presented to the House. That is why they are not changed this year.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Minister's attitude does indicate that he is interested in doing an efficient job here. I commend him on his attitude.

With respect to the amount of the estimates, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. Minister has failed today to offer a reasonable explanation for the order of development of our roads system, when we consider the cut-back of the estimates before us now. For instance, I note that the appropriations for King's highways and secondary roads is some $18 million below last year's estimates. These figures relate directly to the engineering needs study which was completed by The Department of Highways in 1958 and which has been referred to frequently in this House since that time.

We are all aware of the conclusions of that report, which indicated the need for a gradual build-up over a 20-year period, and we also know that this report suggested that it was desirable for the build-up to take place during the early years following this study. Perhaps then, it is now in order to ask the hon. Minister how his present programme fits into the study which has been referred to by the previous Minister as a blueprint for future operations. If the department has discarded this programme, I suggest that hon. members of this House should be so notified.

I find it difficult, Mr. Chairman, to reconcile the programme before us today when the statements of fact, as given on page 42 of the needs study to which I referred, states as follows, and I quote from that report:

The economic growth of the province and the safety and convenience of its people call for the earliest possible improvement of all highway, road and street systems consistent with a sound financial position.

It is difficult to co-relate the position taken by the department today with the position of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) a few days ago. That hon. gentleman indicated that not a stone would be left unturned in an effort to stimulate the economic growth of the province.

Notwithstanding the fact that our road system is of extreme importance in achieving that goal, the hon. Minister in his estimates today has indicated that the government really has no intention of meeting the needs of our highway system, which are so necessary to the orderly economic growth of the province. I suggest that this truly indicates that either there is no co-ordination between the two departments—that is, The Department of Economics and Development and The Department of Highways—or else the grandiose statements of the hon. Economics Minister are intended for window-dressing. To the observer, in any event, the two hon. Ministers appear to be working in opposite directions.

Let me say here, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me that there does not appear to be any imagination with respect to the true purpose of highways in our development. There are many who would tell us that the economic growth is directly related to our communications and our transportation system; and highways certainly could, to a large extent, help that programme if we really wanted to proceed with the matter of decentralization. I think that good and orderly planning in our highways system would have a very decided effect on decentralization, which hon. members on both sides of this House have suggested in previous years was desirable to the over-all development of this province. We believe that the roads should be constructed, and planned, before the need is already there. I think that highways should go in advance of that need, rather than always be in the position of trying to catch up on the backlog of construction which we should have foreseen in the first instance.

Dealing with this subject, Mr. Chairman, I think one of the most glaring weaknesses in The Department of Highways at the present time is this lack of planning with respect to the financing of our highways programme. There really does not seem to be any government planning with respect to the clear-cut responsibilities of the departments that are supposed to be responsible for determining this policy.

You will recall a few days ago, sir, while dealing with the estimates of The Department of Transport, I quoted from two different government publications which indicated that one of the responsibilities of that department was to determine plans for taxing vehicles to provide the funds for construction and maintenance of our roads. It only adds to the confusion when we realize that The Department of Highways is likewise conducting a study, ostensibly for the same purpose. For instance, on May 2, 1961, the then hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) requested the automotive transport association to submit their views on this very same subject to The Department of Highways. Perhaps at an early date, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) will inform this House which department is responsible for this very important policy determination.

Since these conclusions are so important to our entire transportation problem, it should not seem unreasonable if we were to ask that we be given some answers now. Hon. members will recall the words of the hon. Minister of Highways, and I quote from March 16, as far back as 1959, from the Hansard report. The then hon. Minister of Highways said:

May I say this about policy considerations. Because of the importance of provincial subsidies in road and street development, and the new challenges which arise because of the job ahead, the need for re-expanding studies is apparent. The Department of Highways has recognized this and a study is under way.

This statement did not take place in 1961, or 1960; it took place in the year 1959. Yet the hon. Minister of Highways comes to the House today and tells hon. members that a study was commenced in 1961.

Now there is a difference in the statements which are made, Mr. Chairman, and I suggest that it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister to tell us whether or not a study did take place in the year 1959 and 1960 and up until early 1961, or whether or not the statements which were made by the hon. Minister at that time were, in effect, just so many words. We have been complaining, on this side of the House, for a number of years, about the lack of actual policy in determining the financing of our roads. It is a serious problem, and until the financing study is completed, I suggest that the work indicated in need study cannot be carried out in an orderly and businesslike fashion.

There are many in this province who feel that revenue from vehicle taxation will be more than sufficient to take care of the long-run cost of our roads. They feel that revenue from this method should not be used to finance other phases of government activity. They feel, instead, that perhaps other facets should continue to contribute to our roads programme.

We are reminded by the automotive transport association in their brief, a copy of which was forwarded to hon. members of this House, that the tourist industry is very dependent upon adequate roads for the development of that part of our economy. They suggest that the development of our natural resources is dependent upon our road system, and likewise education—I think the hon. Minister mentioned it this afternoon—is more dependent upon our roads which enable school bus services to develop central school organizations.

These problems simply serve to emphasize the need for some type of an announced, long-term plan of financing for our highways. It seems useless, Mr. Chairman, to analyze our problems as has been done by the need study if we do not seek to solve the problem in an orderly fashion. If we had such a long-term plan we would not be facing the problem that has become familiar to this House, when the estimates are up one year and down the next. When this happens, Mr. Chairman, it only leaves the observer with one opinion and that is that the amount of the estimates in The Department of Highways had no direct bearing with the needs, but rather only the political considerations of the over-all budget.

The municipalities in turn have a right to some guidance and leadership from this government in the matter of solving their problems. Certainly there does not seem to be any equity in the method of distribution of subsidies at the present time. It would be interesting some time, if the hon. Minister would explain the formula which permits rural municipalities one rate, towns and cities another, and so it goes. It is not easy for a town or city in turn to receive 33½ per cent of costs of roads while Metropolitan Toronto in many cases receives 50 per cent.

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that municipalities are unable to carry out the needed road projects simply because the funds are not available. Because of their limited tax base, which is restricted to real-estate taxation, their problems are getting worse. The lack of positive action by the government in meeting this problem is not helping these people at all.

Again, referring to our need study, we are reminded that the backlog of construction need is at the municipal level and sooner or later some kind of relief will be necessary from this level of government if the lower levels of government are to carry out their responsibilities.

I was interested, this afternoon, in the remarks of the hon. Minister when he suggested that the government is aware of these problems. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that simply being aware of the problems is not enough. I think the time has come when this government has got to come forward with some positive method of financing these roads and bring some order into the entire department.

For some years, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House, have been advocating a federal-provincial-municipal conference to work out some readjustment of responsibility. These roadways could very well be part of that problem and should be included in any such conference.

Summing this up, Mr. Chairman, I am simply suggesting that, as long as the government delays the determination and long-term plan of financing our road system and announcing it, independent of other taxation, the longer we will have to wait to attack this problem of road building in a businesslike manner.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would not be difficult for The Department of Highways or for the government to sit down and estimate the revenue which will be forthcoming from our highways system over the next 20 years for planning purposes. Having done that—and we have suggested it before—they could borrow against those revenues without having any effect on the economy of the province.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We have all that information projected 20 years into the future.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I appreciate the fact—I intend to ask the hon. Minister later with respect to the information he has—but let me remind him—and I appreciate the fact that he is new to this department; I hope that he is going to bring a conscientious approach to it—that he is supposed to endeavour to solve the problems of The Department of Highways and not the problems of keeping the Conservative government image satisfactory before the public. As long as we keep juggling these affairs we are never going to bring order into the matter of financing our highways. When we consider the relative importance of the cost of those highways in the overall budget I suggest, Mr. Chairman, the time has come to bring some order into the financing.

Now let me say here that if we were to build the roads now we could to some extent plan the development of the province, particularly with respect to decentralization. If we have the roads the revenue from those roads would very well serve to pay off the money which was necessary to be borrowed to construct them now.

If we were to follow this programme, Mr. Chairman, and construct the roads now, we could do something about planning the development of the province; but I submit to you, sir, that as long as this matter is left without positive action it does not make much sense for the hon. Minister of Economics and Development to come here and tell us that the government is really attacking the problem. Highways are elementary to the attacking of this problem; and unless some positive order comes into this particular phase of the development I do not think that we can expect a maximum result to come from The Department of Economics and Development.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, it actually amuses me when I come to this House and have some of the hon. members opposite, who have been here a lot longer than I have, start talking about the Mitch Hepburn era. Apparently the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons) is not aware that this took place some 20 years ago, and this type of comment shows that they really do not want to attack the problem at all; they are simply interested in hurling remarks for political purposes. If the hon. members opposite are going to live in the past, that is their prerogative, but let me tell the hon.

members that as long as I take my place in this House I am going to make my contribution as I see it to the orderly development of this province in the future.

Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the matter of priorities in highway development, I think the government could make public any such priority system, if indeed one does exist. Certainly such publication would leave the department free of charges of political expediency in the choice of road developments.

I certainly would not accuse the present hon. Minister of being responsible for this. I was very pleased to hear his remarks this afternoon that he intends to pull together all these loose ends of the little projects that were started here and started somewhere else, and which we on this side of the House feel might have, at some time in the past, been due to political considerations rather than the actual needs of the roads. I am likewise sure, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) would want me to draw his attention to the fact that there are people in the province of Ontario who are somewhat suspicious that political expediency did have a hand in at least one of the recent announcements made by The Department of Highways.

It seems somewhat more than coincidence that the time of the last by-election would be chosen to announce the rebuilding of the Cockshutt road, part of which runs through the riding of Brant which was in the throes of a by-election. It might not have seemed quite so apparent, Mr. Chairman, if anyone other than the Conservative candidate had had a hand in that announcement. I am sure, sir, that there will be those opposite who will be quick to assure me that this was all a matter of coincidence in the timing of the announcement. I would simply point out to the hon. Prime Minister that an announced priority system of development, that was well known in advance, would preclude any future possibility of political manoeuvring and in the long run would result in the roads being built where they were needed, rather than where they were convenient politically.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would say this: that as long as we refrain from bringing this matter of priority in the road system out in the open, any government that is in power will have to bear the consequences of being accused of political considerations. Certainly there is no reason why this whole thing cannot be brought out in the open so that everybody would know our policy over, say, the next five years. We in the Opposition certainly have no indication, other than some broad general statements, as to where the roads are going to be built in the next five years, what the planning is with respect to those roads; nor have we any opportunity to comment on the desirability of the priorities which are effected in the first place. I suggest that such a plan would have an effect on the orderly economic growth of our province and might assist, as I have said earlier, in encouraging decentralization of industry to the benefit of all municipalities of this province.

Certainly, if we can determine what our 20-year needs are, it should likewise be possible to determine a 20-year programme for the development of those needs. These must be known to the department. The department must very well know what our needs are and where the programme is going to be, because these matters would be elementary to the production of the study that we have talked about so often in this House.

In dealing with this same matter of the announced programme of The Department of Highways, I should like to deal briefly with a recent announcement of The Department of Highways which resulted in considerable hardship and financial losses to many of the taxpayers of this province. I refer in particular to the decision to place service station outlets on Highway No. 401.

Let me make it clear at this time, Mr. Chairman, that I am not criticizing the establishment of these centres, but rather the method by which it was accomplished. This decision is about the best example we can currently find to indicate the bungling and lack of planning by the government in the first place. This highway has been in the process of construction over a 20-year period. During most of that period the government has indicated publicly that outlets would not be permitted on the road and no provision was made for them. Because of this policy on the part of the government, numerous taxpayers established service facilities at what seemed to them to be strategic points of access from the highway; I would think it is not unreasonable to suggest that the provision of these services necessitated expenditures of considerable sums of money by the individual taxpayers to enable them to be in a position to adequately service the traffic which was using Highway No. 401.

As the road progressed, Mr. Chairman, it became increasingly evident to the government that facilities would in some degree be necessary on the road rather than off the highway. As a result, the government recently announced the decision to purchase sufficient rights-of-way to permit the installation of service outlets on the road itself.

It does not—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Excuse me. These locations were established years ago. As a matter of fact, the drilling for water was accomplished at least three years ago in my own area, so The Department of Highways has owned this property. It was surplus land that was acquired with the building of Highway No. 401—we have not purchased any land for this purpose.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I recall last year bringing this matter to the attention of the department, and it seems to me at that time I recall having seen clippings in the press of announcements emanating from the department indicating that service facilities would not be permitted. If the hon. Minister is today telling me that this is not case—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I am not refuting that. I am just saying, to keep the records straight, that The Department of Highways has owned this property for years.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): All the sites?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes.

Mr. Singer: What about Oxford county?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, I think all of them—

Mr. Singer: Oh, no. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) said directly the opposite. He will tell you tonight when he comes back.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that whether or not the department has owned the land over a long period of time, and I am sure that if the hon. Minister tells me they have owned all of the land necessary over a long period of time—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That was my understanding. I know that is true of the four sites east of Toronto, because I am familiar with them.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am sure he would not mislead the House. On the other hand, if this land was acquired subsequent to the purchase of the original right-of-way, I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us whether or not there was any difference in cost to the taxpayer as a result—on a per acre basis, say—of this decision being made after the original purchase. I strongly suggest that the existence of the highway right-of-way would have influenced the second purchase if such was necessary. But if they held the land, and if they had held the land all the time, then the onus was all the greater, in my opinion, on the department to make a public announcement indicating that these rights-of-way would be extended. The Minister of Highways was not prepared to make such an announcement during the estimates of this department last year.

Mr. Singer: The former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) would not let him.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: My hon. friend says the former Prime Minister would not let him. Unfortunately, the former hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) is not here to speak for himself. My hon. friend could be right, or there might be another reason. But the fact of the matter is that these announcements were not made and there are people in the province who have been hurt because the department did not have a long-term policy and did not announce it. I submit to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) that this has cost these people money which many of them could not afford to pay. They took a calculated risk which was determined in part upon what seemed to be the policy of the government.

Before we leave the particular problem of these outlets, I think it is necessary that the hon. Minister inform the House with respect to the manner in which these facilities will be provided. I would hope that it will not be a matter of leaving this to maybe the large oil companies to determine who is going to have an outlet and who is not. I hope that it will not be the case that only the very wealthy are given an opportunity to benefit from these facilities. If the outlets are to be farmed out to the oil companies on some kind of a priority basis, and if they are the only ones that are going to be permitted the opportunity of bidding, I hope that the department will ensure that the individual operators of those outlets will not be exploited as many of them have been exploited.

I think I delivered an address in this House during my first term, pointing out the plight of the service station operators. I think that now is the time to determine a fair policy. Now is the time when the government should lay down a fair policy, so that the benefits from these enterprises will not be restricted to the very wealthy; and so that a few will not be in a position to exploit the actual operators of the facilities. Perhaps the department might consider giving some priority to some of the people who have already been injured as a result of this decision not being made known in the first place.

Mr. Chairman, I have one other matter which I would like to touch on. I refer to the matter, or the subject, or the problem, or whatever you want to call it, of toll-roads in this province. At the present time, there are several bridges which are international in character and upon which tolls are required. In addition, we have the Burlington Skyway bridge which is the only inland structure that is tolled. The hon. Minister might correct me if I am wrong, but I believe that is a fair statement.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that since this is the case, people who use that particular bridge, when taken in relation to the rest of the people of this province, become citizens who are discriminated against because of the policy of this government. On one hand, sir, they are called to pay general taxes for the upkeep of our road system; and on the other hand they are forced to pay tolls every time they use this particular facility which happens to be in their own area.

The present indications, as nearly as I can determine, are that the Homer Skyway bridge over the Welland Canal will likewise be tolled. If such is the case, a particular group of people who use that bridge will likewise be discriminated against. I think the time has come for the government to announce some type of a policy. Certainly, it does not seem reasonable that some people should be subjected to tolls and other people not. I think that the government should indicate a policy with respect to this matter of tolls.

When do they charge tolls? Do they, for instance, only charge a toll when a bridge comes to so many millions of dollars; and if such be the case, why do they not charge a toll for some of the facilities on the expensive Gardiner Expressway? I am not suggesting they should charge tolls there; I am merely pointing out that there is a discrepancy, and as long as the government continues without some kind of an announced policy with respect to this matter of tolls, discrimination will continue and certain groups of the population will be penalized to the benefit of others. I think that the time has come to have some firm announcement as to where tolls are required and where they are not required.

Mr. Chairman, there are others matters with respect to the estimates of the department which we shall endeavour to deal with under the individual votes. As I pointed out earlier, there is certainly plenty of scope because there are only three votes. I suppose it would almost be in order for all of us to stand, make general observations, and still be in order. I do not think that is our intention. I am delighted that the hon. Minister has told us there will be a greater opportunity to go into detail next year. I thank him for that concession and with that, Mr. Chairman, I leave this general portion of my remarks.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, as far as our group is concerned, we do not propose to take a great deal of time on the general discussion of the estimates, because most of what we wish to raise can be dealt with in specifics in these three grab-bag votes that we have to contend with as estimates for about $275 million. However, by way of a general comment, I do want to congratulate the hon. Minister on two accounts; one, his elevation, or move—I do not know whether he considers it an elevation, he shook his head negatively—to The Department of Highways.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I am looking for sympathy.

Mr. MacDonald: More important, I congratulate him for his comment during the observations of the last speaker that he was going to do something about this question of the presentation of the estimates. This was something that we were assured by his predecessor would not happen again. We would have these books placed on our desks so that we would be really equipped to do the kind of serious job that should be done from the Opposition benches. I suppose we have to content ourselves in getting things in one or two steps rather than all at once.

I also want to note and commend the one phrase in his introductory statement—the correction of some past errors in the department that we have been pounding away on relentlessly. In one instance, I do it with a degree of reservation. For example, I am pleased that we are getting on with the building of Highway No. 401 so that it will be completed; and we will not have a series of bits and pieces of highway that begin nowhere and end nowhere. This, it seemed to me by any common-sense assessment, was the wrong approach from the outset; and I am a little puzzled as to how we got off on that procedure other than perhaps by the old business of political pressures. A right amount of political pressure—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I might just comment. It is easy for those of us who do not live in Toronto to understand why this road was built in pieces. For instance, there is a 30-mile section built around London, Ingersoll and Woodstock; and I think the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) would recognize what a benefit that has been to that part of Ontario, to have it built there two or three years before the entire road was built, because it has taken a great deal of traffic off the downtown streets of London, Ingersoll and Woodstock.

The hon. members who live in Toronto might not be aware of these things, but if they lived in the outlying parts of the province they would know that this is not political expediency, this is just good planning.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course not. I quite understand. I sat on the so-called toll roads committee with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—or rather under his direction on the committee—for some time, and he will know that in the early stages this was the official approach. The error in it was acknowledged quite frankly at a later stage, during or immediately after the sittings of the toll roads committee, and it has since been corrected. Despite his high-toned rationalization of what happened, undoubtedly what played a very major role was the right amount of pressure being put at the right amount of time by the right person, so that a section was built in one area rather than somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I cannot agree.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I know the hon. Prime Minister cannot agree—for political purposes, but it does not alter the truth. The other instance, however—and this is the one I had some reservations on because I noticed the hon. Minister was a little coy—was in his change of policy with regard to building that highway from Atikokan to Fort Frances. He said that is going to be completed, but he did not say when.

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River): Is the hon. member against it?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not against it. I have been pleading for it to be completed. As a matter of fact, I happened to be in Atikokan last spring after the Lions Club had held an entertainment in which some of the local poets had come up with a song.

It was in the lusty tradition of northern Ontario and I shall not repeat it down here because it would offend some of the staid southerners, but it really did a job on the hon. Minister's predecessor for no action, or no real promise of action. I commend him for indicating that they are going to move and complete this at something other than 10 miles at a stretch, which would have meant another five or six years, at least a couple of elections.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We have cut it about four or five years, we are not sure. We hope to have it open in 1964, but it may be 1965.

Mr. MacDonald: In 1964 or 1965! In other words, the hon. Minister is going to do about 15 miles a year instead of 10 miles?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: From both ends.

Mr. MacDonald: From both sides! All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that my reservations were more solidly based than I thought and I will be interested to see the new version of the song that they will have for the present incumbent in this ministry.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Does the hon. member not think it is a good idea?

Mr. MacDonald: A good idea to speed it up?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, really speed it up instead of dribbling it on for the next two elections, which is about what is to be done. However, Mr. Chairman, let me not get into this idle and somewhat futile politicking, as there are endless examples of it. We saw in a by-election in Timiskaming a year or two ago, in which they had spent all the money for the surveys and pre-engineering and yet for purposes of garnering a few more votes and coping with the feeling of opposition that the by-pass was too far away, the late Minister of Mines had his picture resurveying the whole route. For the purposes of the by-election it was going to be replaced, but I think it went back to the original afterwards. It had served its purposes for the by-election.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I think they found engineering difficulties on the road.

Mr. MacDonald: They undoubtedly did find engineering difficulties.

Mr. Chairman, there are two aspects of this study which have been announced and re-announced and re-re-announced and now it is revealed that it was initiated, apparently in 1961, with regard to a review of fiscal policies for highways, roads and streets throughout Ontario. I am not going to take a great deal of time speculating on this, but I want to submit that this is one of the most important things that we need at the present time.

There are two aspects of it, important points within this study, that I want to touch on briefly. One is that this past summer—I believe it was in the summer, yes in June 23, 1961—I was interested in reading in the Port Arthur News Chronicle a statement with regard to an agreement that had been made by the hon. Minister's predecessor with the Marathon Lumber Company to open the road north of Manitouwadge, which would connect with Caramet and give the Caramet, Stevens and Rocky areas access through Manitouwadge to the Trans-Canada highway and the Lakehead.

The point that I want to make is as pertinent to The Department of Lands and Forests as it is to The Department of Highways. I have made it before in this House, but I reiterate it again, I want to suggest to this House that it is time that we integrate our road development programme and our forest development programme, because I submit that in the province of Ontario we have been going about it very much in the wrong way from the very outset.

If I may make a contrast without getting into the details; in a province like British Columbia, when a company is given a timber limit, one of the first things that this company must do, before it starts any cutting at all, is to build its basic road system. If the company requires assistance in the financing of it, they in effect get the loan from the government and the loans are paid back on an amortized basis by the company over a specified number of years. The number of years is of no relevance at the moment.

The net result, Mr. Chairman, is that there is a basic structure of roads which, if they become part and parcel of the public roads system, would end up in a public roads system throughout the whole area.

Now what do we do in Ontario? We have a company comes in, company "X", and it spends $50 million to establish a mill and it will spend $500,000 to run a few basic roads out from wherever the mill happens to be. Over the years they plow back profits slowly each year—and it is painfully difficult to get profits put into roads. They can go in many other directions, but they will not go into roads. So the very serious likelihood is that 25 years later this company still has not built its basic system of roads, the hinterland is completely beyond reach—inaccessible. Therefore there is difficulty in firefighting, frustration of any possibility of a modern forest management programme because they are not cutting to that limit, in the hinterlands of the limit. Overmature timber is being lost. In some areas disease gets in and destroys the timber resource. All of this stems from the failure to build the basic road system.

It seems to me that it is just plain common sense that we should alter our policies so that if a company is going to be spending $50 million on a mill, they should be obligated to an expenditure of a good many millions of dollars to build the basic road system. Now if that is done on the one hand by The Department of Lands and Forests, and this is integrated with The Department of Highways, it would seem to me that the whole of northern Ontario could have a network of highways, or at least public roads, that would become available to the public to be used, instead of the kind of feudal atmosphere we have at the moment where in many instances people come and find that there is a road block because it is a company road and they cannot get in.

As a matter of fact, with the right amount of pressure, everybody can get in except the union organizer; but with no amount of pressure can the union organizer get in. The hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) surely is not surprised at this. I wonder where he has been living for quite some time if he is surprised at that.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I have not been up north as much as I would like.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I was struck with the potentiality of this kind of development some two or three years ago. Like most people who have not been in on the limits of a company like Marathon I had thought of northern Ontario as having the northern Trans-Canada route and the southern Trans-Canada route, and I viewed all of this great area between as a great hinterland or forest wilderness in which there was no means of road transport. But after spending a couple of days on the Marathon limit I found that there was a world within the world, so to speak. Out of Manitouwadge there is a network of company roads that—when I visited them it was in the summer time, I know they might be rather grim in the spring—but at that stage there were very good roads—a network so one could get around in all of this great area.

Now, having learned this, I was impressed once again with the basic validity of the approach in British Columbia, and I think in many other jurisdictions, and I am wondering why we have to delay as long as we have—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We have done this in a number of places.

Mr. MacDonald: You see, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister interjected that it was done, but he is doing it in such little bits and pieces. Here I will support the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) who spoke a few moments ago. Why not announce a policy with regard to this, and launch it, and not do it in bits and pieces, so that each little opening of a 15- or 20-mile stretch of road can become a great event for the little Tories instead of really getting down and meeting the needs of the people.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I have a list here, which the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) gave me, of five places where we have done this in order to open up the forest resources.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): It is done all the time, the hon. member is years behind.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not hear that.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I said the hon. member is years behind.

Mr. MacDonald: I am years behind? I will submit to the hon. Minister that if I am years behind I am right with him, because that is where he is—years behind in the announcement of a policy in setting up this kind of road system. He has not yet come to grips with the basic business of it in his own department. However, we will get to that when his day comes with his estimates.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Pardon me, but if the hon. member looks at the capital programme, for instance Highway No. 101, that is a glaring instance of exactly the kind of thing that is being talked about. It is being done. We do not have to announce any policy, the policy is there.

Mr. MacDonald: Is Highway No. 101 the one west from Timmins?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: It runs from the Quebec border westerly through Matheson, Timmins, Foleyet, Chapleau to Wawa.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into an argument with the hon. Minister, but this is not the point I was raising at all.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Sure it was.

Mr. MacDonald: This was just a new road carved out of the bush.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Well, it was not carved out of the bush, just to carve a road out of the bush, and the hon. member knows that.

Mr. MacDonald: Was this an adaptation of a forest road before?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Well, certainly, it started out as a mining and access road for the development of mineral resources and timber resources, and that is exactly what it is doing, plus all of the other services that the highway is going to provide. In the case of the highway from Hornpayne to No. 11, the same thing applies; or the road from the Lakehead north through the Abitibi limits; the same thing applies again.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Minister is doing it in bits and pieces without any over-all policy, and furthermore he has set the stage so that he will have to do it in bits and pieces because of his whole financial approach, and the failure to impose an obligation on the pulp and paper companies down through the years because they do not have to get out and do it.

Now, a comparable kind of thing down in the more heavily populated southern part of the province, Mr. Chairman, of course is the whole complex of financing roads in an area like Metro. Why, for example, the government has persisted as long as it has—and whether it will change after it gets the result of this study, I do not know—with the procedure in which it will finance 50 per cent of the cost of expressways and will not share in any meaningful way in other modes of transport in the Metro area, I simply do not know. The result, of course, is that the local municipalities get into the business of building expressways. At the moment we have had one of the most striking displays of politicking—in the public battling over the extension of the Spadina expressway—that has ever taken place in the Metro area.

In fact, I would go one step further, Mr. Chairman, and say that the kind of thing that has happened in the last two or three months—where one month there is a sizeable majority against and the next month there is a majority in favour, is one of the most suspicious switching in votes that has ever been recorded in Metro history. I think it might be interesting to find out what goes on behind the scenes. But my greatest concern, Mr. Chairman, is the kind of policy that emerges because of the basic fiscal arrangement of this government.

I can speak rather feelingly on this issue because the Spadina extension will run literally within 100 yards of my own front door. I live in a township, for example, which—like many other built-up areas—has a relatively small amount of parklands, and now faces the prospect that one of its major park areas is going to be lost; and when it is suggested by local township people that they are going to fight this through the courts because they have no intention of losing it without a fight, then the word is dropped as a warning of things to come, that if they are going to fight, then a bill will be introduced in the Legislature and that will be the end of it, the fight will be over before it starts.

This sort of rough, tough approach is in contrast to the municipal autonomy that is so often preached from the government side of the House. The only alternative is to knock down a lot of homes and provide some other parkland area and this, of course, results in a permanent loss of assessment in a municipality which, like all municipalities, is fighting for an increase in its assessment.

However, sir, these are aspects of fiscal policy. I would just plead with the hon. Minister to hasten with his study so that we can re-examine the whole basic approach rather than delay any longer.

Mr. Chairman, I did want to make one final comment—again on the question of the general financing of our highway programme. I was interested in the observations made by the hon. Liberal spokesman in introducing estimates—in fact, in one of two instances, I was puzzled by them. He envisaged the day—or he expressed the views of those who envisaged the day—when the highway revenues are going to exceed what we need for building our highways. I may be wrong, Mr. Chairman, but I think this is a never-never day that we do not need to worry about. I think the need for highways in a vast, development province such as the province of Ontario is such that we are never going to be faced with the problem of an excess in highway revenue over what we require to continue with our highway programme.

As a matter of fact, I almost wonder whether this was not setting the stage for another plea to oppose the weight-distance tax, or something of that nature, such as he was indulging in last year. I have fought almost a lone battle since we had unanimous support for this proposal on the toll roads committee some four or five years ago—unanimous including the Liberals, the Conservatives and myself on the committee. I was most refreshed to be assured by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) a few days ago that he, for one, on the government side of the House acknowledges the basic validity of the battle that I have been carrying on. All I can hope is that we will soon get greater equity in our highway revenues.

However, on the question of toll roads, this is another on which we in this group have been fighting a lone battle. I am interested to learn that the hon. member speaking on behalf of the Liberal group, appears now—in this new posture of vigorous opposition—to be taking up this issue instead of leaving it go by default. When we fought the toll roads issue in the toll roads committee the best that can be said for the Liberal spokesmen is that they changed their minds every six months—as to whether they wanted toll roads or not.

I submit that if it had not been for the consistent fight of some of us, there was a serious danger that we would have had tolls on Highway No. 401 because there were people who were seriously thinking of the proposition of putting toll roads on Highway No. 401, as an excuse for getting it completed quickly. It is like the poor folk up at Fort Frances who, if I may use the vernacular, were “sucked in” on the deal of a toll on the causeway there in the hope that they could get this government to move on this issue instead of stalling on it for much longer.

However, Mr. Chairman, there was so much vacillation on the issue of toll roads, particularly by the Liberal spokesmen during that committee, that we got ourselves into the position where today the government has toll roads on the Homer bridge, and others. Whether or not we can reverse this policy at this stage and get them taken off, I do not know, but the case, of course, for having them taken off is valid. It is valid not only for the reason the hon. member advanced, but it is valid for another reason.

These people have been suffering the consequences and the inconvenience and the overall economic loss of bottlenecks in traffic for years, and having suffered the consequences of these bottlenecks they are now going to have to suffer the consequences of having the bottlenecks removed by paying the toll—which is discrimination against them—and they are going to be paying it for an indefinite time in the future. If we had had a consistent fight on this issue down through the years, instead of the waffling in one section of the Opposition, we maybe would not have had this problem with us today.

Mr. Chairman, the rest of the items that I and other members of my group wanted to raise, I think, fit in as isolated items dealing with one or another of the three estimates and I will leave them for later consideration.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I just want to deal, at the moment, with one isolated item. The hon. Minister may recall that on December 11, in the Throne debate, I had certain remarks to make about the township of Clarence. The hon. Minister may recall that a special audit was ordered by The Department of Municipal Affairs. It was done by a firm of auditors, Demarais and Parisienne. There were certain other inquiries that I made which have not yet been answered directly—more particularly to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass). I will come back to those at the proper time.

The point I want to direct to the hon. Minister's attention, and perhaps solicit an answer from him, was this: I was advised, and I stated at that time that, as a result of the audit conducted by Demarais and Parisienne it became apparent to The Department of Highways that some $25,000 had been paid to that municipality improperly. I was further advised, and I stated at that time, as well, that the department having conducted its own audit was working out its system of recovering those improperly paid funds by withholding further grants.

What I want to ask the hon. Minister is this: as a result of this audit, did the department take any disciplinary action or did they take up with the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) the discoveries that they had found in this audit, and if so, what action, if any, was taken? It is a very serious thing, Mr. Chairman, to my mind that, in a municipality, some plan is worked out, or some scheme is worked out whereby a department, such as The Department of Highways, improperly pays some $25,000 in highway grants. And it is rather surprising to me that we did not hear—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Is this under vote 703? -

Mr. Singer: Oh, no. It is under the general office. I want to know how they conduct the general office, Mr. Chairman. I want to know why, when the department had conducted this audit of their own, they did not take some disciplinary action and indicate to the hon. Attorney-General that some disciplinary action was indicated.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I always understood it was The Department of Municipal Affairs that conducted the inquiry into Clarence; and as a result of their findings The Department of Highways withheld subsidies to the municipality to make recovery. We never had anything to do with it because I happened to be Minister of Municipal Affairs at the time the inquiry was instituted; I was not there long enough to see it completed.

Mr. Singer: With great respect, Mr. Chairman, as I stated on December 11, and as I state again today—as a result of the audit ordered by The Department of Municipal Affairs and done by Demarais and Parisienne, Highways went in and did their own audit, and then discovered that $25,000 had been paid that should not have been paid.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We do that as a matter of course anyway as far as the municipal audit was concerned.

Mr. Singer: Oh, yes. But there was a special audit done as a result of what had been ascertained by Demarais and Parisienne. As a result of this special audit it was ascertained that $25,000 was paid that should not have been paid. The question that I am asking the hon. Minister is this: as the result of this special audit, what disciplinary action was indicated and what reports were made to the hon. Attorney-General; and if there was none made, why not?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, the chief accountant says that we assisted The Department of Municipal Affairs in this audit of Clarence township. It was just routine as far as our people were concerned, working with the other auditors, because our people were most conversant with the matter of subsidies.

Mr. Singer: Well, with the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, this is not my impression of the facts at all. There was this report, and I read certain portions of it into the record on December 11. Desmarais and Parisienne dealt very summarily, in a very short report, with anything touching the highways department. I stated, and I think the hon. Minister has confirmed it this afternoon, that I was advised that the department went in and did its own special audit. As a result of The Department of Highways' own special audit, it came to the conclusion that some $25,000 had been improperly paid.

What I am trying to find out is, having made this discovery, what disciplinary action did the department take itself or indicate to the hon. Attorney-General should be taken?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It was not up to The Department of Highways to take any action, because the audit was instituted by The Department of Municipal Affairs. Ours was just a routine audit when our people went in.

Mr. Singer: Oh, Mr. Chairman, surely there is something more than this. Here it is indicated in a certain municipality that grants have been improperly paid by one of the departments of this government. This has been indicated to the department. The department takes steps to recover those monies by withholding other grants. The Department of Highways' own investigation that took place after the Municipal Affairs audit showed this. Then surely there should have been some follow-up. I am asking the hon. Minister: was there a follow-up? If there was no follow-up, why not?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I would not know.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am very disappointed in the hon. Minister if he does not know. I think the hon. Minister owes a duty to this House to ascertain—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It was no concern of The Department of Highways, because it was Municipal Affairs that instituted the inquiry.

Mr. Singer: Oh, Mr. Chairman, surely it is the concern of The Department of Highways when $25,000 of Highways money has been improperly paid.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: But we cannot have two departments conducting an inquiry. I remember instituting the inquiry in Municipal Affairs, it was definitely Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for the hon. Minister but I am sorry that he will not face this matter head on. When a department of government has certain funds to allocate, and this department allocates more than any other department, and when it is ascertained that some $25,000 of those funds have been improperly allocated, and when there is more than a suggestion that there has been wrongdoing, one would think that the department that has improperly allocated funds would initiate some sort of disciplinary action.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that if an inquiry had been instituted or The Department of Highways had found funds, or overpayments had been made, we would have a full inquiry—I can assure the House of that—not only through the hon. Attorney-General's department but through the provincial auditor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, let me review what I said—

Mr. C. H. Lyons (Sault Ste. Marie): The hon. member has repeated himself six times.

Mr. Singer: Let me review what I said, Mr. Chairman, for the seventh, eighth, ninth or, if necessary, the tenth time. I said that an inquiry was made by The Department of Municipal Affairs, they instructed a firm of auditors called Demarais and Parisienne. This firm conducted an audit and brought in a very brief report which indicated that there were certain things wrong in that municipality. Certain actions were taken and, as I say, the Municipal Affairs aspects of it properly do not come within these estimates and I will deal with those at a later time. But I said that I was advised, and I said this on December 11, and the record is in Hansard, that as a result of what Demarais and Parisienne ascertained The Department of Highways then caused a special audit to be made.

Demarais and Parisienne did not state in their report that there had been $25,000 of Highways money improperly allocated; they hardly mentioned The Department of Highways at all.

But I say that my information is, and I gather this has been confirmed as being correct by the hon. Minister this afternoon, that after the Municipal Affairs report, after the Demarais and Parisienne report, The Department of Highways went in and did its own audit. As a result of its own audit, it found that some $25,000 of Highways monies had been improperly given to this municipality.

I was further advised, and I understand the hon. Minister has confirmed this this afternoon, that the department, having discovered this, withheld future grants to recover its $25,000. Probably the department is not now out of pocket in the monies it advanced because it took steps to recover them. But what I am saying, sir, is this: this is a very serious matter, and if someone has worked out a method of getting money improperly from The Department of Highways one would expect The Department of Highways would indicate to the hon. Attorney-General that certain disciplinary types of action might be taken.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like under this vote to raise a specific matter relating to the sale by the department of a property near Kingston. This sale occurred in 1958, but it came to my attention only recently.

At first sight, it might appear not to be a matter of tremendous import as the total amount of money was relatively small, but it raises an important question of principle since it involves a clear cut conflict of interests on the part of an elected municipal representative which, as far as I have been able to determine after careful study, was not only condoned but actually facilitated by the government through the hon. Minister of Highways of the day. Repeated revelations of instances of conflict of interests—

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): Who is the municipal official, if the hon. member pleases?

Mr. Bryden: I will come to that.

Repeated revelations of conflict of interests at the municipal level have been causing increasing concern in many quarters in recent years and so also has the government's lax attitude to them. Since the new administration took office last fall the public has been reassured to some extent by an apparent stiffening of the government's policy in this field as revealed by announcements of the new hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), formerly the Minister of Highways.

Unfortunately, the episode that I am about to describe gives rise to serious doubts as to the genuineness of the government's new policy.

Admittedly, sir, it is only one episode, yet it came to my attention by pure coincidence. One can only speculate as to how many similar episodes there may be which have not come to the attention of anyone outside the government.

I do not want to put myself in the position of making vague allegations without adequate evidence to back them up and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I plan, with your permission, to present all the relevant facts of this case as far as I have been able to discover them.

I will begin by stating that I plan to place on the table of this House certified copies of the following three instruments which are registered in the Kingston Registry Office:

1. Instrument No. 104119, being a deed dated June 2, 1958, conveying a portion of Lot 14, east side of the Great Cataraqui river in Pittsburg Township on the outskirts of Kingston in Frontenac County, from The Ontario Department of Highways to the corporation of the Township of Pittsburg. This land, which is popularly known as the Poston property, has an area of 17.032 acres.

2. Instrument No. 106003, being a deed dated September 25, 1958, conveying the same land, minus a little less than three acres, from the corporation of the Township of Pittsburg to Minnie Pearson. This land consists of two parcels with a total area of 14.47 acres.

3. Instrument No. 106004, being a deed which is also dated September 25, 1958, conveying exactly the same land as was conveyed to Minnie Pearson by Instrument No. 106003 from Minnie Pearson to Eric R. Pearson.

Handwritten notations on the deeds indicate that the prices paid by Pittsburg township to The Department of Highways, by Minnie Pearson to Pittsburg Township and by Eric R. Pearson to Minnie Pearson were in all cases $14,000.

The land which was conveyed by The Department of Highways to Pittsburg Township is a rectangular block bounded on the east by Highway No. 15 and on the west by the Great Cataraqui river. The slightly less than three acres which the township retained when it resold the land to Minnie Pearson consists of a strip 100 feet wide running diagonally across the main property from Highway No. 15 to the river.

It will be noted that title to all of the land in question, except the diagonal strip, was acquired by Eric R. Pearson less than four months after The Department of Highways sold it to the township.

Eric R. Pearson is at present the reeve of Pittsburg Township and was deputy reeve in 1958 when the above transactions took place. Minnie Pearson, to whom the township sold the land and from whom Eric R. Pearson acquired it on the same day and for the same price, is his mother.

According to the stamp on the back of instrument Nos. 106003 and 106004, the sales from the township to Mrs. Pearson and from Mrs. Pearson to her son were both handled by the Kingston law firm of Rankin and Wright. I understand that this was the firm of the late D. J. Rankin, who, at the time, was the Progressive-Conservative MPP for Frontenac-Addington. I mention this fact because Mr. Rankin also appeared in this affair at an earlier stage, in a manner which I will describe later.

On January 29, 1962, I wrote to the Kingston registry office asking for certified copies of the above three instruments. Not having received a reply to my letter by February 16, 1962, I telephoned the registrar on that date and she undertook to forward the certified copies to me immediately. I received them in the regular course of mail on February 20, 1962.

On the next day, February 21, I sent letters asking for further information to the clerk of Pittsburg Township, C. J. MacLean, to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass) and to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow).

My February 21 letter to the township clerk asked if there were any by-laws or minutes of the township council relating to the purchase of the land from The Department of Highways and the subsequent sale of most of it to Minnie Pearson, and if so, if it would be possible for him to send me copies. The letter also asked if the strip which was not sold to Minnie Pearson is still owned by the township, and if so, the purpose for which it is now being used.

I had not received a reply to my letter by March 15, so on that day I sent a registered letter to the clerk, forwarding a copy of my original letter and asking for a reply at his earliest convenience. I have still not received any reply, although admittedly my second letter went out only a few days ago.

My February 21 letter to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs asked if any officer of his department had conducted an investigation into the affairs of Pittsburg township in 1959 or 1960, and in particular, if the department had ever investigated the conveyance of a portion of Lot 14 east of the Great Cataraqui river by the township to Minnie Pearson. I also asked if it would be possible for me to inspect the file relating to any investigation that may have been carried out.

The hon. Minister's reply, which was dated March 13, 1962, ignored my request to see the file but provided the following information, and I am now quoting from his letter:

One of my supervisors, Mr. Hill, visited the Township of Pittsburg during a routine visit to eastern Ontario. The purpose of his visit to the Township of Pittsburg was to acquaint the clerk and reeve of a complaint we had received from a ratepayer regarding the sale of this property.

Mr. Hill said that he advised the clerk that the question of the sale of the Poston property had been brought to the attention of the department and from the information received it would appear that, in view of the position of the reeve in this matter, the sale was voidable as against the municipality under the provisions of what was then section 57 of The Municipal Act. The clerk arranged a meeting with Mr. E. R. Pearson, the reeve, who explained that he had acted on legal advice respecting the transaction and that since the property had been acquired through his mother's name and quite openly, he was satisfied that the transaction was quite legal. He agreed, however, to contact his solicitor again and get further advice on the matter.

The statement of revenue and expenditure in the auditor's report for the Township of Pittsburg for the year ending December 31, 1958, shows on the revenue side, "sale of Poston property $14,000" and on the expenditure side "purchase of Poston property $14,000." This is the only entry in the audit report in respect of this property.

My February 21 letter to the hon. Minister of Highways asked simply if I could inspect the department's file relating to the site of the property by the department to the township.

Under date of March 6, 1962, the hon. Minister sent me photographic copies of correspondence on the department's file relating to this sale, together with a covering letter summarizing this correspondence. He explained in his covering letter that:

There are several different files in the department relating to this matter and a great deal of this correspondence relates to the routine matters of payment of rent, taxes and the necessary paper work in relation thereto. The enclosed correspondence, however, does cover all the phases of the transactions in so far as The Department of Highways is concerned up to the time when we finally disposed of the property to the Township of Pittsburg.

A review of this correspondence brings to light the following main facts:

The Department of Highways acquired the property in 1943 for $5,000. At the time the land and buildings were under lease to a concern known as Smart's Fisheries Limited for $25 a month. The department continued to rent to this concern, although it ultimately raised the rental to $75 a month.

The property was apparently acquired for a Kingston by-pass. In time the department changed its plans and the property became surplus, although a small portion of it continued to be used for incidental purposes of the department.

As the word got around that the property was surplus, several persons, including Smart's Fisheries, wrote to the department expressing an interest in buying it. The first such letter appearing in the material provided to me was dated January 2, 1947, and similar letters appeared periodically for several years thereafter. The usual reply of the department was to the effect that, if and when a decision should be made to dispose of the property, it would be advertised for sale and all interested parties would have an opportunity to submit bids.

Smart's Fisheries Limited is apparently not an incorporated company, and I am not certain about the nature of E. R. Pearson's connection with it. I understand, however, that at the present time he and William Smart are equal partners in the business, though I do not know how long that arrangement has existed.

A letter of May 6, 1953 to the department listed E. R. Pearson on the letterhead as assistant manager and was signed by Mr. Pearson on behalf of the firm. The letter stated that the firm had established a large wholesale fish business on the location and was anxious to expand its facilities. It therefore reiterated a request made on previous occasions to buy the property.

The department had been giving some consideration to putting the property up for sale for at least three years prior to the receipt of this letter, and now, apparently, it decided to proceed. As a first step, it arranged for an appraisal by a realtor in Kingston. The appraisal report, dated September 19, 1953 placed a valuation of $13,500 on both land and buildings.

On January 19, 1954, E. R. Pearson on behalf of Smart's Fisheries made a written offer of $10,000. A memorandum of January 22, 1954, written by the department's acting chief property evaluator, suggested that, since this firm had occupied the property for a long time, their offer was "deserving of every consideration." A year later, the services manager stated in a memorandum to the superintendent of properties dated February 3, 1955:

In making your recommendation to the property committee, I think you should point out to the committee that this property has been under lease to a Mr. Smart, of Smart and Pearson, for a great number of years and that they have made many improvements. This information might influence the opinion of the committee whether this property should be publicly advertised.

Judging by other memoranda on the file, however, the department appeared to consider it necessary to advertise the property. One such memo suggested that Mr. Pearson's offer of January 19, 1954 could be considered along with other offers. On February 19, 1955 Mr. Pearson, again on behalf of the firm, increased his offer to $11,000.

The first steps to offer the property for sale were taken early in 1954. For reasons which are not entirely clear, progress was slow, but by the beginning of 1955 arrangements had been made for another Kingston real estate firm to make a new appraisal. This appraisal, which was dated March 2, 1955, valued the land and buildings at $11,500, as compared with $13,500 in the earlier appraisal.

At this juncture a new factor was introduced. In a letter dated February 24, 1955, the mayor of Kingston stated that his city was considering plans to build a bridge which would end on the Poston property and requested that no steps be taken to sell the property until these plans had advanced beyond the preliminary stages. The department complied with this request.

By now, however, it was quite anxious to sell because, as one memorandum put it, "this property will require an extensive maintenance outlay in the very near future." Some pressure was therefore put on Kingston, but at the same time that city's interest was recognized.

In a letter of June 3, 1955, the city was advised of the two valuations which had been placed on the property and was invited to make an offer. Further correspondence was exchanged and finally, on December 14, 1955, Kingston offered $11,500, being the lower of the two valuations.

The department accepted this offer and was ready to complete the transaction, when Kingston discovered that it would have to back out. A letter of March 19, 1956 from the clerk-controller stated that the city had received legal advice to the effect that it could not spend money for a public highway wider than 100 feet in an adjoining municipality.

The clerk-controller inquired as to the feasibility of the department placing a "covenant in the deed to the effect that if any portion of this land which is not built upon should eventually be required for public purposes, the purchaser agrees to convey it to the Crown at cost price, plus expenses incurred to the date of sale."

At this point, a Mr. J. B. Sampson, who has operated a real estate business in Kingston for many years and who had indicated an interest in bidding on the Poston property as far back as 1947—and frequently thereafter—immediately renewed his request. In a letter of March 19, 1956, he stated that, if the department would sell him the property, he would undertake to provide the city of Kingston, free of charge, with any land it might subsequently require for a bridge. It is impossible to say how much Mr. Sampson would have offered for the land on these terms, because his offer was not pursued.

The department dismissed as impractical the restrictive covenants proposed by Kingston and proceeded to advertise the property for sale by public tender. Advertisements appeared in the Kingston Whig-Standard in May and tenders closed on June 7, 1956.

The department's summary of "Tenders Received for Property Sale No. 107" shows that nine bids were made and the four highest were:

Samuel Springer and John Burke Sampson, Kingston, $18,700.

Rosen Fuels Limited, Kingston, $18,200.

Frank A. Branscombe, Niagara Falls, $17,500.

E. R. Pearson, c/o Smart's Fisheries, Kingston, $16,700.

A notation at the bottom of the summary reads "Awarded to Samuel Springer and John Burke Sampson, Kingston, Ontario."

The same J. B. Sampson wrote to the department on June 18, 1956, asking advice as to the successful tenderer and stating, "We are anxious that a right-of-way should be provided for a connecting road through this property, across to the city of Kingston."

Unaccountably, the sale was not proceeded with. On July 3, 1956, the department's tenders secretary sent a laconic memorandum of "All Bidders" stating that, "The property committee, Department of Highways, has ruled that no award is yet to be made," and returning the deposit cheques. On October 26, 1956, F. A. Branscombe, who was the third highest bidder, wrote to the department asking if tenders would be called again. There is no indication, however, in any of the material provided to me that the department took any action for about a year and a half, notwithstanding its apparent anxiety at an earlier date to dispose of the property.

Apparently, some approaches were made by the township of Pittsburg in the early part of 1958, because on March 19, of that year, the late D. J. Rankin, then MPP for Frontenac-Addington, wrote to the then hon. Minister of Highways, now Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), as follows:

I am very anxious to get a decision on whether the department will sell the Poston property to the township of Pittsburg. You have their application on file.

I might mention, Mr. Chairman, that the application referred to was not included in the material sent to me, so I am not in a position to comment on it. Continuing from Mr. Rankin's letter:

The township are satisfied that this property will eventually be required for an extra high level bridge across the Cataraqui, and feel that if they acquire it at this time they will save a great deal of money if the land is allowed to develop in the meantime. They figure that the township should, in any event, at this time, have access to the Cataraqui river for its people and that, pending a further growth of the Kingston area, the people can use this property as access to the river.

A memorandum of April 14, 1958, from the superintendent of properties to the hon. Minister contained the following paragraphs:

The property is quite valuable and I feel that a sale would realize at least $20,000.

As you know, sales are by public tender or auction. However, in the case of municipal bodies wanting DHO land, our property committee will authorize a direct sale based on a fair market value. Such sale price is arrived at by having independent appraisals made and then offering the property to the municipality at a figure based on the appraised value.

If the township of Pittsburg is seriously considering purchase I will arrange for appraisals to be made and then advise township of price. In the event it is acceptable to township I will then recommend to our property committee that a direct sale be made to the township of Pittsburg.

On April 28, 1958, a new Minister of Highways was appointed in the person of the present hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass). On May 9, 1958, he wrote to the superintendent of properties as follows:

The clerk of Pittsburg township, together with Mr. D. J. Rankin, MLA for Frontenac, called on me the other day, and after a good deal of discussion, left a brief which I attach to this memorandum, and an offer of $14,000 for the property.

Perhaps you would consider this and I would be glad to have your advice and discuss it with you and Mr. Fulton before any decision is made.

After that it did not take long to complete the deal. The superintendent of properties replied to the hon. Minister four days later, on May 13, 1958, stating that:

A recommendation will go forward to the property committee on Friday, May 16, recommending to them that they accept the offer of $14,000 submitted by the Township of Pittsburg for these lands and buildings.

As I have already indicated, the deal was closed shortly afterwards.

The Pittsburg brief referred to in the hon. Minister's memorandum of May 9, 1958, is lengthy and I will summarize it by stating that it made the following three main points:

(1) It was important from a planning point of view to provide a right-of-way for a future bridge connection with Kingston.

(2) Under the official plan which the township was then drafting, this land would be zoned as commercial and it was important from the township's point of view to increase commercial assessment.

(3) And on this point I am quoting the exact words of the township brief, Mr. Chairman.

The township has an opportunity to dispose of this property after keeping the proposed 100 foot right-of-way, without profit—after splitting the lot—to the people who have used it as a fishery wholesale depot and who agree, if they can obtain title, to immediately erect a spacious modern wholesale depot and fish processing plant in keeping with federal and provincial standards.

These, then, are the facts, as far as I have been able to determine them from the material provided to me by the present hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow). Since certain points seemed to require further explanation, I wrote a second letter to the hon. Minister on March 9, 1962, in which, among other things, I asked the following two questions:

(1) Why was the sale by tender, held in June, 1956, not proceeded with?

(2) Were the appraisals suggested by H. Barry, superintendent of properties, in a memorandum dated April 14, 1958, undertaken and if so, what valuations did they place on the property?

The hon. Minister replied to this letter on March 12, 1962, and, for reasons which I will attempt to explain, his explanations were far from satisfactory. I will deal first with his answer to the second question as follows:

The appraisals referred to by Mr. Barry in his memorandum of April 14, 1958, were not obtained since we already had two independent appraisals. The first of these was for $13,500 and the second was for $11,500. These appraisals had been obtained when the department was considering the transfer of the property to the City of Kingston and it was felt that circumstances had not varied sufficiently to warrant the expenditure for additional appraisals.

It is true that two appraisals had been obtained, but subsequent to these appraisals the land had been put up for sale by tender and four firm bids had been received from responsible parties in amounts ranging from $16,700 to $18,700. That was in 1956. By 1958 Mr. Barry had come to the conclusion, according to his memorandum, that the property was "quite valuable" and that "a sale would realize at least $20,000."

How then could it reasonably be concluded that the earlier appraisals were still valid?

The hon. Minister's answer to my first question was equally unsatisfactory. He said:

There is nothing in the files of The Department of Highways which would indicate the specific reason why the sale held in June, 1956, was not proceeded with. . . . However, the surrounding circumstances immediately before the sale and those subsequent to the sale would, to my mind, indicate that the property was desired for municipal purposes by either the City of Kingston or the Township of Pittsburg, even though the City of Kingston had been having difficulty in establishing its authority to make the purchase.

I am aware that there is need for an alternative access to Kingston from the east and that a high level bridge over the Cataraqui river connecting with Highway No. 15 is the preferred method of achieving that access.

By 1956, however, The Department of Highways had clearly decided that, though it was sympathetic to Kingston's problems, it could no longer hold up the sale of the Poston property on account of them. Its action in offering the property for sale by tender was the outward manifestation of this decision. In any case, the highest bidder, Mr. J. B. Sampson, had clearly indicated both before and after submitting his tender that he was fully aware of Kingston's plans and quite ready to co-operate in realizing them.

Indeed, Pittsburg does not appear to have come into the picture at all until about a year and a half later. No doubt the known fact that Kingston wanted a right-of-way for its proposed high-level bridge provided the township with an excuse for asking for the land, but it was hardly a reason for selling to them.

Certainly Pittsburg itself could not have had any plans for building the bridge at any time in the foreseeable future, for its total assessment in 1958 was less than $3.25 million. If it was casting itself in the role of a sort of trustee for Kingston, its efforts were unnecessary since the high bidder had expressed willingness to do that. If it had some sort of arrangement with Kingston, I would like to see evidence of it.

I would also like, Mr. Chairman, to see evidence, which I have not been able to obtain as yet due to the failure of the township clerk to answer my inquiries, that the township council of Pittsburg actually approved the purchase of land from The Department of Highways and the negotiations leading up to that purchase, and that it approved the later sale of the land to Minnie Pearson.

This, however, brings one into the realm of speculation, so I will now turn my attention to another hard fact of the case. The brief which the township presented to the then hon. Minister of Highways, now the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), in May, 1958, clearly indicated the township's future plans for the land. It was to be disposed of, minus the 100 foot right-of-way, to "the people who have used it as a fishery wholesale depot." The hon. Minister was clearly in a position to know that the people referred to were Smart's Fisheries, Ltd. After all, his department had been the landlord of this firm for 15 years.

He was also in a position to know that one of the principals in the firm was E. R. Pearson, the deputy reeve of the township. Since the beginning of 1954, Mr. Pearson had been the person who had written to the department on behalf of the firm in attempting to advance the firm's efforts to buy the property from the department. It is interesting to note that the bid submitted in response to the call for tenders in 1956 was made not by the firm, but by Mr. Pearson personally and that he merely used the firm as an address.

One would have thought that all these facts would have given pause to the hon. Minister. It is not for me to say that the township's re-sale of the land was voidable as against the municipality, but there can be no question that it was improper. The use of Mr. Pearson's mother as an intermediary was nothing but a subterfuge. The substantial facts were that all the land other than the 100-foot strip was sold by the township to its deputy reeve and that this was clearly the intention from the time the township clerk and the local MPP first spoke to the then hon. Minister of Highways, now the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Not only did the hon. Minister not try to dissuade the township representatives from this questionable course of action, but he positively facilitated it.

I can understand the anxiety of Smart's Fisheries and Mr. Pearson to acquire the Poston property. They had a business operating on that property, and it was natural for them to want to hold their location and develop it.

The department, however, had considered this factor and had decided that if the land was to be sold to a private party it had to be offered for sale by tender. I think the department was right in that decision. When public land is disposed of, there should be no favourites, every citizen has a right to put in a bid if he so desires.

The intervention made in the name of Pittsburg township—and I am not certain that it was made by the township—enabled the deputy reeve, now reeve, to accomplish what he had failed to accomplish when the land was offered for sale by tender. In other words, he got the land. Moreover, he got it for $2,700 less than he himself had bid two years earlier, and for $4,700 less than the top bid at that time. Surely there had been some advance in the value of the land in the two-year interval?

True, Mr. Pearson did not obtain title to the strip reserved by the township but this hardly reduced the value from his point of view. His house is on one side of the strip and the fish warehouse is on the other side. The construction of the high-level bridge is merely a future possibility, and in the meantime there is nothing to prevent Mr. Pearson from using the strip to cross from his house to the warehouse, which is all he needs it for. And if the bridge should ultimately be constructed, the probability is that the value of Mr. Pearson's holdings will be enhanced. His property will then lie on the two corners formed at the point where the new connection with Kingston joins Highway No. 15.

When the deal was brought to the attention of The Department of Municipal Affairs in 1959, that department expressed considerable concern; but, in keeping with the laissez-faire attitude to such matters which characterized government policy in those days, it did nothing more. The new hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), formerly the Minister of Highways, has indicated in recent months that he intends to take a stricter attitude to conflicts of interest at the municipal level than was the case in the past. His announcements along this line were welcomed by most people, but unfortunately the role he played in the Poston property affair gives rise to serious doubt as to his capacity to carry out his announced policy effectively and forcefully.

I will now place on the table of this House all of the documents to which I have referred in the foregoing recital. These consist of:

1. Certified copies of instruments Nos. 104119, 106003 and 106004 from the Kingston registry office, which I will identify as exhibits 1, 2 and 3;

2. File copies of letters of February 21 and March 15, 1952, from myself to the clerk of the township of Pittsburg—exhibits 4 and 5;

3. File copy of a letter of February 21, 1962, from myself to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, and his reply dated March 13, 1962—exhibits 6 and 7;

4. File copy of letter of February 21, 1962, from myself to the hon. Minister of Highways, and his reply dated March 6, 1962—exhibits 8 and 9;

5. Copies of correspondence and other documents provided for me by the hon. Minister of Highways under cover of his letter of March 6, 1962—exhibit 10; and

6. File copy of letter of March 9, 1962, from myself to the hon. Minister of Highways and his reply dated March 12, 1962—exhibits 11 and 12.

Mr. Chairman, I think it will be agreed that I have done everything I possibly could to find out exactly what happened in relation to this matter which, in itself, is merely one episode, but which in its basic principle and the insight it provides as to government administration is, in my opinion, most important. I have done everything I could to get the facts. I have not been entirely successful because of certain inquiries I made not having been answered. But on the basis of the facts that I have been able to discover and which I have presented to this House, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that there was a clear-cut conflict of interest which the government of the day, through the hon. Minister of Highways of the day, now the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), clearly facilitated. I will now place the documents referred to on the table, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) seems to go to a lot of trouble to find trouble in the province of Ontario, and this time he happened to hit part of the riding which I represent. This happened before I was elected representative of Frontenac-Addington. I feel no responsibility myself but, having lived there all my life, this is the first time I have heard there was anything wrong with this transaction. I might say, for the benefit of the House, and the hon. member who is trying to cause trouble, that I happen to be the president of Rideau Marina (Kingston) Limited who own property adjacent to the property of which he is talking.

I also would like to say that we bought our property privately in 1958, and when he is talking values he had better go down and look up that deed; because we bought it for much less than The Department of Highways sold this to the principals he is talking about. Furthermore, he says that Mr. Pearson bought this property for the same price, or near the same price, as the township paid for it. Now, that, in itself, is not the truth. The township bought this property for the simple reason that they did want a 100-foot right-of-way for road allowance if at some time a bridge should be built from Kingston—

Mr. Bryden: I covered all that.

Mr. Simonett: All right, he said all this; but he did not say that this roadway is running diagonally across the property and it would have no value—no resale value—once they fenced their property. It would be broken in two lots. The property along there goes to the river and to the highway and the price there is paid mostly for river property. I do want to clear this up—that we looked it over; we were not in a position to pay near as much as Mr. Pearson. Living in that area all my life I never heard anybody complain about it; in fact, I have a letter from a Mr. Sampson, to whom he referred today, stating that he had phoned him within the last ten days to try to get some information from him. And Mr. Sampson, who, as hon. members heard, was the high bidder there in 1956, wrote and told me that he had no hopes of ever buying the property nor did he want it; and he could not understand why the hon. member for Woodbine should be questioning him or anyone else on the sale.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think it should be stated it is quite true, as the hon. member said, that I phoned Mr. Sampson some time ago, a week or two ago, and asked him if he would be prepared to talk to me about this matter. He said he thought it was a hot potato and he wanted to keep out of it. But I think it should be stated again and emphasized, that Mr. Sampson made a firm bid of $18,700 with a 10 per cent deposit; and if the department had seen fit to go through with the deal as I believe it was morally obligated to do, then Mr. Sampson had a firm deal and was committed to buy the property.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on this score. My hon. friend started out by making the comment that he had some inquiries that he wished to make in reference to the sale of a certain piece of land in the great and historic riding of Kingston, which is not true. It has nothing to do with my riding directly or indirectly. But I can remember, Mr. Chairman, a great many years ago as a young man—more years ago, sir, than I, perhaps, care to remember—being associated with Anthony M. Rankin. He was the Conservative member for the riding of Frontenac in this Legislature at a time when Mr. Ferguson was Prime Minister, at a time when my father was the Attorney-General.

The name Rankin down in the county of Frontenac, and in the city of Kingston, stands for everything that is good and decent and sincere. Dave Rankin's lips at this hour are sealed in death, and of David Rankin I can say, having practised my profession—that of the law—with him for many years, his lips sealed now in death cannot today defend the slander that has been levelled against him.

As far as I am concerned, and I go a step further about his partner, Mr. Harry—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege—

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Will the hon. member be quiet for a minute; I want to settle with him for a while.

Mr. Bryden: I stated what was on the record.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I do not believe the hon. member. I think he is lying.

Mr. Bryden: Look at the record.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I will look at the record. When I get through with the hon. member he will know about the record.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister should withdraw—

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Sit down!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, has the hon. Minister withdrawn that statement?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Are you asking the hon. Minister to withdraw the charge of a liar?

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: It is not his point of privilege.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you asking the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Nickle: The hon. member slanders the dead and then he works in behind the corpse.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Minister withdrawing or not?

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I am withdrawing nothing.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling. The hon. Minister said that what I said was a lie, or consisted of lies, and I submit that he should withdraw it. If anybody wants to check whether I was lying or not they can look at the records.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I am going to check it; the hon. member need not worry!

Mr. Bryden: I submit that he should withdraw that statement.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: The hon. member is going to be checked as he has never been checked before.

Mr. Bryden: That is fine, go ahead and do it; but withdraw.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: All right; it's withdrawn. Now let me go on and finish. Harry Wright was David Rankin's partner and he died a few weeks ago of cancer and I am telling the hon. member, he has to be responsible this afternoon for what he has said—

Mr. Bryden: I am responsible for it.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: When he goes down to the county of Frontenac and his hon. leader and he get in the city of Kingston in the county of Leeds and Prince Edward county, this New Democratic Party that they are associated with—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of order—

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Will the hon. member be quiet!

Mr. MacDonald: I rise on a question of order, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: They are going down to defeat—

Mr. MacDonald: I rise on a question of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister has risen and described what the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has said as "slander." He is now going off on a political tirade with regard to the New Democratic Party—

Hon. Mr. Nickle: So it is!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I submit that the facts were presented and if there is going to be any argument let it be on the facts instead of personal vilification and the kind of charge the hon. Minister is making.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Mr. Chairman, when I go down to Kingston this weekend I am going up to the law office of Rankin and Wright and I am going to have the accountant of that firm make a check. I will gamble my political reputation that Dave Rankin did not charge a dime and what he did was prompted by sincerity of purpose and honesty.

Mr. Bryden: I did not say he did.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Yes he did, he did everything but condemn the man, he slandered the dead and should hang his head in shame.

Mr. Bryden: I quoted from documents on the file of The Department of Highways and nothing more.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: The hon. member has ruined his party down my way, and I will look after it until the time comes.

Mr. Bryden: Why can we not deal with the issue?

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Never mind!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, as has been indicated by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) this matter was first brought to my attention on February 21. I immediately requested a study be made of the complete file—I might say it is quite a comprehensive file because from the time of the original purchase by The Department of Highways the city of Kingston was also interested and wanted to get this property for a right-of-way for a future bridge and causeway.

Then it was found that it was outside the jurisdiction of the city of Kingston to acquire this property. The township of Pittsburg made application to acquire this property—this is subsequent to when it was offered by public auction—but in the intervening period both the city of Kingston and the township of Pittsburg expressed interest in acquiring this property as a right-of-way for a future causeway and bridge.

I am just speaking off-the-cuff because I am clear in my own mind that there is absolutely nothing improper as far as the transaction of The Department of Highways is concerned, and the file went back to Downsview. About one hour ago I asked to have the file brought down and it is not here yet, but it will be, so I am just speaking off-the-cuff and bearing in mind the assurance, after going over it with Mr. Fulton and Mr. Dick, who is our chief legal adviser, that the department was absolutely within its rights to sell this property to the township of Pittsburg at a price above the two appraised values placed on it. The Department of Highways instituted two appraisals on this property when the township of Pittsburg was interested in purchasing it.

Mr. Bryden: What about the bids that were made afterwards?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That was before that—

Mr. Bryden: No, they were after.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, anyway I will get the file and table in the House the full explanation of this whole affair; but, up to the day the deed was granted and payment was made by the township of Pittsburg to The Department of Highways I am satisfied as the responsible Minister that nothing untoward took place. It was a legitimate deal. There is not a week goes by that some municipality does not express interest in a certain surplus property which The Department of Highways owns. Instead of selling it at public auction, when it would appear to be in the interests of the municipality to secure it for road purposes, commercial or industrial purposes, we offer it to the municipality at the appraised value by qualified appraisers.

In my opinion this is a perfectly legitimate deal, what happened between the mother—and the deputy-reeve. I do not know whether she is the mother or the wife or what she is of the person the hon. member for Woodbine refers to; I would not know anything about the relationship—what happened there I know nothing about and I care less. I am interested in the transaction up to the time the deed was given to the township of Pittsburg for this property, and the fact that the township of Pittsburg paid The Department of Highways the appraised value for the property.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that is exactly the same explanation as the hon. Minister gave to me by letter and, as I stated in my presentation, I considered it entirely unsatisfactory. I may say that if I had got from him what appeared to me to be a satisfactory explanation, I would never have raised the matter in the House at all. I wrote to him to try to find out if there was any reasonable explanation of what happened. The explanation he gave to me—and I am not blaming him, he was not in The Department of Highways at the time—the explanation he gave to me in my opinion was not a reasonable or convincing explanation for the reasons I have given.

I have put facts on the record and I have also put on the record my reason for not accepting his explanation. I am willing to let the matter stand or fall on those facts.

I may say that I have also placed on the table all of the departmental records which the hon. Minister let me see, so there is a substantial portion of the departmental records, or copies thereof, on the table already.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I am authorized to say that the Pearsons mentioned by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) have no connection and are not related to any Pearsons that we know. I leave it at that.

Mr. Chairman, one of the things I submit that we are entitled to know from the new hon. Minister of this department in presenting his estimates is whether, when he asks for the vast sum of money that he is asking for this year—which totals $254 million—whether in fact that is the amount of money that he wants, or is it as in the previous year, as I shall show, just somewhat in the form of a wild guess of the amount of money that he feels is required?

I might say, by way interpolation, here that last year when the sales tax dawned upon us, that at the same time the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) was in full hue and cry and full throat about the magnificent fact, or it seemed to be magnificent, the way it was propagandized, that the budget of the province of Ontario was going to exceed $1 billion for the first time in human history. Now as it turned out, if that was a record sought to be achieved, they did not make the record and they did not spend the $1 billion.

I would not necessarily criticize them for that, but one of the reasons they did not spend $1 billion in the Treasury department last year was that The Department of Highways apparently spent some $20 million less than they asked this House to vote and which this House was pleased to vote to them. I think the figures, as I glean them and as I understand them from the hon. Provincial Treasurer's budget speech made on March 1, is that whereas they had asked for $267.9 million last year, actually they spent $247.2 million; a difference, a tidy difference, of $20.7 million.

A number of things flow from that, but let me say by way of preface that I do not condemn any measures of economy. First,

I wonder when they fall short by $20 million, and I hope they are not falling into the same habit of thought as a certain government of recent history that used to think in big terms, but when they fall short, sir, of an estimate of $20 million, it might be said it is a rather sizeable chunk of money by which they have miscalculated. I wonder myself—the falling short or the acquisitiveness, if I may put it that way, of The Department of Highways in asking for $267.9 million—what effect that has in Treasury board circles.

We never know what goes on in the Treasury board. It would be a day of three moons in the sky that one of us was ever invited to listen in to the utterances that are emitted in that sanctum sanctorum, but when they do meet together and Highways ask for $267.9 million and they have miscalculated by $20 million, then I just wonder, as a citizen of this province and as an elected representative, what effect that has in its reverberations upon the requests of the other departments and other fields of government endeavour, where perhaps penury is being practised, or policies are being delayed, because the Treasury board says there is no money available. I hope I have made myself clear on that score. In other words, I feel, sir, that we are entitled to criticize The Department of Highways in their estimates and in their calculations and in their arithmetic and geometry—and whatever other arts and sciences they use in coming to a decision on the amount of money that they are going to ask for from the public Treasury of this province.

Then they make a mistake of $20 million, and other departments—they would never tell us, but I would imagine that when they see that inviting figure of $20 million, any reasonable hon. Minister who had some pet project or some pressing need or was influenced by some pressure group, might look back ruefully and say—he would not say anything stronger than darn: "If that darn Department of Highways had not asked for that $20 million they did not use, perhaps the Treasury board would have given it to me to put this programme into action."

Well, to sum it up, I submit that, at the very least, it is bad accounting.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Bad business.

Mr. Sopha: Bad business, my hon. friend from Bruce, who is a very good businessman himself, says, and he says it very aptly.

The second thing is that the $20 million engenders in me a personal feeling because I know, I know as well as I stand here, that the $20 million if used could have built the road to Timmins. They had it last year. And I say to my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle), who is a man of great sentiment and feeling and understanding—he will appreciate what I say when I try to repeat for him through you, sir, the depressed, resigned, defeated feeling that is in my breast as I stand here, and I look at this capital works project and I see not a cent, sir, for the road to Timmins in the forthcoming year.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, and they had the $20 million last year and it was about a year ago that an enterprising group in Sudbury, under the aegis of the chamber of commerce, decided to go by snowmobile from Sudbury to Timmins to show the feasibility of that route in the winter time, and there is a road, there is a bush road built by the Portelance Lumber Company, which throws itself some 20 or 30 miles north of Capreol. They got a goodly portion of the distance done to Timmins on that road before they took to the Hydro and the transmission lines and completed the journey up to the home town of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner).

There was nothing wrong with that outing. Nothing wrong. Some were elderly men who should not perhaps exert themselves in such physical endeavour, but one would assume that in preparation for the trip they took along sufficient medication and medicaments and food and warm clothing and everything.

They were all but on the point of departure—I think it was in the month of February about a year ago—and just on the eve, I remember it well, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) who then occupied a more esteemed office, announced in his office—you see, sitting in his office at Queen's Park he just could not quite picture the fun and pleasure and joy of such a trip, sitting looking at the four walls around him, and having heard about this, it having been brought to his attention that such a safari—if one may adopt the language of Africa and transplant it to northern Ontario—such a safari was about to embark for Timmins, then I never saw that side of his nature before and I have not seen it since.

Just as they are about to depart he announces to the gentlemen of the press gallery whom I assume, he called down to the office, and he said, "Get it in the papers quick. They do not have to make that arduous trip through the northern wilderness without the aid of even aurora borealis, tell them we will build the road."

Hon. members can imagine the happiness that caused in Sudbury that night, as they put their sleeping bags away, they put their mukluks back into storage. All that medication that they had assembled, one assumes that they took it back to the stores, pharmaceutical stores, and got their money back, when those headlines came out. I think they even interrupted Perry Como or something to announce it on the television, that he had said that.

Not many people in Sudbury are as sceptical as myself of some of the utterances of some of the hon. members of this government. But I wondered, because I knew this was about the ninth time that he had promised the road to Timmins, at least the ninth time in his career as leader of the government. It had been promised many times by those who preceded him and, well, since that they have not got the courage, those who were engaged in the organization of the trek, they have not had the courage to start another one.

I sum it up this way, here is the final note that I put on it. Tomorrow the representatives of the northeastern chambers of commerce come to see the Cabinet, to present a brief to the Cabinet, and I have been invited. I have not been invited by the Cabinet, I hasten to add, I have been invited to accompany them. I take pleasure in reporting here and now that I have been invited to accompany them tomorrow because in case I am not welcome perhaps someone in the Treasury benches will send me a note and ask me not to come. My feelings then will not be hurt. However, they are going to be there tomorrow and many of the people who are vitally interested in the construction of this road link from Sudbury to Timmins are going to be there and I assume that it is going to be part of their brief.

They are going to be disappointed when they look at the capital works projects and see that there is not a penny provided for even any survey of the feasibility, or the practicality, of the layout of that road. It is a poor way to greet those fine people from northeastern Ontario.

I merely say this in conclusion: they had the money last year, $20 million they did not spend. That money could have been used for that very important piece of construction of highway.

I say to the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) who is accustomed, being the fine Christian gentleman that he is, to take things sometimes at face value when perhaps people of more sour nature are inclined to look a gift horse in the mouth—I say to him that one of the reasons that they do not provide us with this book called Capital Construction Programme until the very last moment is they are ashamed of it. They are ashamed of its inaccuracies.

If the hon. members want to see a glaring inaccuracy in it, I invite them to turn to page 137 and have a look at it with me. I pause, Mr. Chairman, like any good clergyman would, having announced the hymn. Page 137, hon. members will see three-quarters of the way down the page, this statement: "Granular base, ditching, culverts and hot mix, Highway 634, junction Highway 544 and Highway 634 northerly, length miles, 1.0."

Now that is not very good English, because there is not a complete English sentence anywhere on that page. But we will not stop or pause to analyze the grammatical construction, but I would like hon. members to look at that one mile. If they look at the chart over on the opposite page there, at the top, they will note that according to the symbol used—proposed new work roadway is indicated with a heavy solid black line—all that crooked road that they are building there is proposed new work. Now I testify here and now that that distance, and confirmed by the scale of miles—

Mr. Chairman: This comes under vote 703.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am almost finished. I am talking about inaccuracies in the main office, and until the hon. Minister corrects the inaccuracies, sir, I cannot feel justified in voting for his salary.

But you will note the distance as shown on the map is about nine miles from the point of Highway No. 544 to the hamlet of Val-Caron. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) will remember the last time he was in Sudbury, when we drove him to the airport after nominating the man who will defeat the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) at the next election, that that was the highway over which we crossed to the airport. I say in a somewhat serious vein that, if the hon. Minister is going to build one mile of highway, then why in his chart, does he have to show it at about nine miles, when he is not going to build nine miles, he is going to build only one.

I suspect the reason they show it to be such a distance is because there is so little highway work to be done in the district of Sudbury this year that they are ashamed of it. And I would ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. Minister of Highways and his colleagues on that side of the House to remember that I represent an urban riding, the city of Sudbury, and any assistance we get in the city of Sudbury from The Department of Highways is from his municipal programme which is statutory, generally statutory. All the rest of this vast area here outside the urban centre of Sudbury has presently an hon. member from the Conservative party.

Perhaps the hon. Minister has forgotten but the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) who has not been here much, is one of the supporters of his government.

Maybe, as my hon. friend from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) says, maybe that is the reason why he is not here, that he is so displeased and upset with the pittance that the hon. Minister gives him. I think the total for this year is about 44 miles of road in the whole vast district of Sudbury, that are going to be built. Not many of them will be adjacent to Sudbury, some on the island, some down towards Little Current and White Fish Falls, and even Elliot Lake is included.

Elliot Lake is in the district of Algoma, it is part of the Sudbury highway district, but the longest stretch of road that is going to be built under the Sudbury district is the 10 miles that is going to be built in Elliot Lake. Subtract the 10 miles and the hon. member for Nickel Belt gets virtually nothing from this government at all.

I will say this in conclusion: that at least Highway No. 634, I ought to point out to the government, goes past his door, goes past where he lives. I do not know whether that will assist him to be re-elected or will help to defeat him, if the only road being built adjacent to Sudbury goes past the door of the hon. member. I think that most of the electorate would take a very dim view of that. However, I will leave it but maybe he will be back soon—perhaps he will be back tonight—and he will be able to make his own plea to this government for the road to Timmins.

Now, sir, under the main office there is one other item that I should like to take up, just one item. I was reading only yesterday that H. L. Mencken said, if a person attempts to expose foolishness, the foolishness will be destroyed; it will go away, people will cease and desist from being foolish.

And I want to turn to something, a foolish act on the part of this department, the foolish act done not when the present hon. Minister was in charge, and not when his immediate predecessor was in charge, but a foolish act when the dairyman from Dunnville was in charge and it is not many years ago. Now under The Highway Improvement Act—

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Is the hon. member going to compliment me for all the roads we built at that time?

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes. Oh yes, indeed. Under The Highway Improvement Act, as it was before the revision, under 87: "Every portion of the King's highway shall be maintained and kept in repair by the department." Then it goes on to stipulate that if it is not kept in repair and the fault is with the department, that the department is liable, in damages, for injury or loss caused as a result of the non-repair.

Sub-section 2. These words are important:

In case of default by the department to keep any portion of the King's highway in repair, the department shall be liable for all damages sustained by any person by reason of the default." etc.

Now, that is repeated, almost verbatim, in section 33 of the revision. Nothing, so far as is material to what I say hereafter, has been altered. Now anyone, aside from a lawyer, looking at that, looking at those words, would think that the institution responsible for keeping a highway in repair was The Department of Highways, the department. I notice in the book here, where we are asked to vote, we vote money to The Department of Highways. There is the significant word, "the department."

When a resident of Sault Ste. Marie sustained damage, September 19, 1955, and he brought an action, then the action of the department—I expect it will be said by way of affirmation that the department insures itself. The department buys insurance to protect it against this liability. Is that so, Mr. Chairman? It insures through a private insurance company? Well, that is even worse.

Now this individual—it is difficult to pronounce his name—Mr. Perepelytz, whom, I am told, is a man of very limited means, started an action on September 19, 1955 in the office of the local registrar at Sault Ste. Marie, against the township of Korah and The Department of Highways, as named defendants. Notwithstanding all I have said, and what I have recited from the book about the liability to keep in repair by The Department of Highways, the department, under the aegis of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan)—who, apparently, was very sensitive about such things as that—after the action had been started and The Department of Highways had been named in that way as a defendant, they apparently pointed out to the solicitors for the plaintiff in Sault Ste. Marie, to look a little further down that long section 87. When one does so, one sees in sub-section 8—it goes to 10; 10 sub-sections to that section 87—these words:

In any action under this section against the department, the defendant may be described as "His Majesty the King in the right of the province of Ontario, represented by the Minister of Highways for the province of Ontario."

In other words, they are pointing out to the solicitor how to name the Crown in the writ of summons. But you note, Mr. Chairman, the words "may be described." Now I would not believe for a moment that Perepelytz, having issued his writ—if the township of Korah, and The Department of Highways; I would not believe for a moment that the former hon. Minister was sensitive about the way he was described. I would not think that, knowing the man as I do, that it was a case of sensitivity and "either I am going to be described right, or you are not going to proceed."

But it is like, to draw an analogy—supposing Perepelytz had walked in to buy his licence plates over there in the building, that he had said, "Where is The Department of Highways?" to some uniformed attendant. One would not expect the attendant to say, "You do not mean The Department of Highways, you mean His Majesty the King in the right of the province of Ontario, represented by the Minister of Highways for the province of Ontario."

Now, one would never expect that response. The Department of Highways is fairly well known throughout the province, and aside from its name, I suspect that a great majority of the people in the province, know generally what its duties are. However, after the year had gone by from the date when Perepelytz sustained his damages, the solicitors for the insurance company, the claim had been subrogated, pointed out to the solicitors for the plaintiff: "Well, you have not sued the right body. You have named The Department of Highways but you have to call it Her Majesty the Queen, in the right of the province represented by the Minister of Highways."

So the solicitors for the plaintiff, and I ask hon. members to pay careful attention to what went on after this, they moved before Judge McDonald of Sault Ste. Marie, a very able, fair-minded and sympathetic judge, to amend the writ. They said: "We should not really have the department in here, we should have this long style of clause here to properly describe the Minister of Highways." I say to those hon. members of the House who do not know the details of such things, that the Queen, the Crown, cannot be sued in her own courts unless there is statutory permission to do so. But in common law, the Queen could never be haled into her own court. That is one of the prerogatives of the Crown. The only way one can sue the Crown is if there is some statute that abrogates the prerogative of the Crown, and this is one of them.

Anyway, it went before Judge McDonald for that simple amendment and Judge McDonald was pleased to grant it. He issued an order striking out Department of Highways and putting in Her Majesty the Queen as represented by the hon. Minister of Highways in the right of the province of Ontario. Now hon. members would think the hon. Minister of Highways, even the insurance lawyers to whom he had subrogated the claim, would not indulge in pettifoggery, would not indulge in the trivial, that they would let Perepelytz get on with his action and find out whether the department on the merits of the case had failed to keep in repair a road that they were liable to keep in repair. Have done with the thing. See if Perepelytz was entitled to any compensation. Pay him or, in the other case, if he was not entitled to his compensation, then let it be tried by a judge and his claim adjudicated upon and be dismissed.

One would think that would be the way for a government department or Minister of the Crown to approach such things. But what did they do? Well, they got into high dudgeon. Judge McDonald had issued the order amending the writ. That was the only statement that had been issued—no statement of claim, just the writ—at this point. They take Perepelytz to the court of appeal, they appeal Judge McDonald's order, they go down before the court of appeal, and the lawyers are getting more expensive as we go along. Some of the leaders of the bar are involved in it and from page 553 to 580—27 pages in the Ontario Reports—three of Her Majesty's learned judges are exercised about whether Perepelytz has done the right thing in suing The Department of Highways or Her Majesty the Queen, etc., and they split two to one.

Mr. Justice Hogg and Mr. Justice Schroeder go through the prerogatives of the Crown as far back as 1382, tracing the history, defending the honour of the hon. Minister of Highways to be described in the proper way. However, the hon. Minister of Highways and his solicitors do not put it over Mr. Justice McKay. He is on Perepelytz's side, and from page 570 to 580 Mr. Justice McKay comes down four-square for justice and says: "What does it matter? You call it The Department of Highways, or call it the Minister of Highways, or Her Majesty the Queen, etc. It is all the same outfit." All right, so they win there, two to one.

One is entitled to wonder at this point where Perepelytz, the poor man, is getting all his money, getting all his money to resist this assault hon. members see to have his action tried by The Department of Highways. They have got lots of money, $267 million, but Perepelytz finds it hard to scrape up enough, no doubt, to pay his lawyers.

So, as a result let me read hon. members the head note of section 87 of The Highways Improvement Act permitting the bringing of an action against the department for damages arising out of non-repair of the King's highway. It introduces a new right of action and derogates from two established prerogatives of the Crown. The procedure described by the section must therefore be strictly followed and the defendant must be described in the writ as provided by subsection 8 as Her Majesty the Queen, in right of the province of Ontario, represented by the Minister of Highways, the province of Ontario. A writ in which the defendant is described as The Department of Highways for the province of Ontario is a nullity and cannot be amended by substituting the name of Her Majesty as the defendant.

So hon. members see at that point, Mr. Perepelytz had never had his action tried, but he is out of court. He is out of court. The writ is a nullity, Mr. Chairman. The year has gone by.

This is a great victory for the department, and who knows, perhaps there was wassailing in the corridors of the department, in the offices, that Perepelytz's attempts to get money out of the department had been defeated—defeated on a technicality albeit, never yet defeated on the merits. But they reckoned without Mr. Perepelytz, because he was determined to go further and he went. Yes, sir.

Now, to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from a decision of the Court of Appeal, in such a case—I think I am right but I am open to correction—but in such a case he must first argue for leave to appeal before a single judge of the Supreme Court. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr.

Nickle), who has practised at the bar for many years, nods to me.

He must apply for leave to appeal. That is one trip down to the ultimate in marble architecture, the highest court of judicature in this land, at Ottawa. Then, if he is successful—and he was, he got leave to appeal—then what must he do? He must put $500 in court, he must scrape up $500 and deposit it in court to pay for costs, security for costs. Then he must proceed to get his factum printed.

A factum is the statement of all the evidence and material, a reproduction of all the material and all the evidence that has been taken up to that point and his argument of law. At a conservative estimate, it costs about $1,000 to have the law publishers publish the factum, and that must be deposited in the court in 25 copies, 25 copies must be deposited with the Supreme Court of Canada. So before his lawyer has uttered a word down in the Supreme Court, Mr. Perepelytz is out at least $1,500, not counting the money he had spent in resisting the appeal brought by the department in the Court of Appeal. All that is already down the drain, a further $1,500.

As I said, Mr. Perepelytz was a very determined man and away he went to the Supreme Court of Canada. This time there was no dissent, no dissent. This exercised the time and attention of five judges, the Chief Justice, Messrs. Justices Taschereau, Rand, Locke and Cartwright. They were unanimous in their opinion and they managed to dispose of the contention of The Department of Highways and the hon. Minister of Highways in exactly six pages. Let me just read to hon. members what Mr. Justice Rand had to say. He is no longer on the court, he is now dean of a law school. Harken how short his judgment is:

The effect of the several statutory references to The Department of Highways in respect of duties and the created liability toward injured persons is to permit an action to be brought against the Crown designated by that expression as a name. Any other construction would be little short of a statutory snare for the practitioner. The permission to bring the proceeding in the name of Her Majesty does not exclude that, but taken as furnishing an additional mode. I would therefore allow the appeal and restore the order of the district court judge as proposed by the chief justice.

And let it be said Perepelytz got his costs against them throughout.

An hon. member: How much were they?

Mr. Sopha: At a guess the costs at that point were probably somewhere between $5,000 and $6,000—$5,000 and $6,000 of taxpayers' money.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): What was the name of the plaintiff's solicitor who made the error in the first place?

Mr. Singer: He did not make an error because the Supreme Court of Canada said so.

Mr. Sopha: There was no error. There was no error. Mr. Justice Rand said there was no error. He said Perepelytz could bring his action against The Department of Highways or against Her Majesty the Queen as represented by the hon. Minister of Highways. There were alternative modes.

I started by calling it foolishness and is it not foolishness? Is it not foolishness when a litigant seeks to assert right in the court for damages because of alleged non-repair? Then certainly public policy must demand, it is only common sense, that you get on to the trial of the action and let the judge decide. Let the judge decide, not the jury, because they do not permit juries. This department would not risk itself before a jury. It has to be tried by a judge alone.

Hon. Mr. Allan: It was the insurance company.

Mr. Sopha: I am glad the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan)—the fastidious dairyman from Dunnville who had to be described correctly—I am glad he mentioned the insurance company. Because, you see, it is not the case of the litigant against the government at all.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I heard the hon. member the other day speaking about ministerial interference.

Mr. Sopha: It is not the case of the litigant against the government at all; it is the litigant against the insurance company—against the insurance company. And what have they done? Here is the sacrilege. Here is the sacrilege of what they have done, that in subrogating their claim to insurance companies and letting them defend, then from their offices, in their marble edifices on Bay Street, this government, this department, almost picks up the prerogatives of the Crown, puts them in a suitcase and takes them down to the insurance company's office.

Here, they say to the insurance company, all the special rights that inhere in the Crown—all the privileges of the Queen in her own courts—they are yours and you can use them. Here are the insurance companies and their lawyers using all these devices and this legal pettifoggery in order to obstruct and block and prevent Perepelytz from having his case tried in court.

To put it in another way, one would assume that if it were the department's solicitors, or the hon. Minister was concerned—but I venture to say that when the writ comes into the department the hon. Minister never sees it, he never sees it. It comes in and immediately it is sent down to the insurance company's lawyers downtown.

If there was a personal touch, if Perepelytz's problem came on the desk of the hon. Minister, when he saw the nature of the injury and the claim for compensation, the hon. Minister might look at it, assess it, and say, "Has this man a just claim?" One would never think an hon. Minister in the exercise of his good common sense would permit his solicitors to indulge in such trumpery and pettifoggery as to resist a claim because the defendant had not been named properly. "You did not call me by my right name. You cannot sue me because you did not call me by my right name." Well, who has such fastidious care about what he is called? You should hear some of the things I am called sometimes.

The situation is that government has gotten so far away from the people now that the hon. Minister never sees a case like Perepelytz; he never sees it. Immediately it comes through the door, the document with the red seal on it is sent down to the insurance company's office downtown.

Hon. Mr. Allan: What would the hon. member do?

Mr. Sopha: What would I do? I would insure myself. I would insure myself, my car—the reason I looked into this was because I had occasion to bring action against the department and I see the type of pettifoggery the litigants meet with. I never bothered to look to see how Perepelytz made out finally. I do not know. But I hope—I am afraid to look, because when I see a man of the assiduity and the tenaciousness and the spirit of Perepelytz, who takes the department to the Supreme Court of Canada in order to uphold his rights on a question of principle, then I hope that finally in the ultimate trial of his case that he won his damages. I hope he won, because I would be depressed if the department licked him.

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hon. member must be depressed then.

Mr. Sopha: I hope after all that trouble that the hon. Minister and the insurance company and the smart lawyers down on Bay Street gave him about such a picayune, puerile, petty business as not naming the department properly—I hope they had the decency to settle with him out of court.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, I am really interested. You know, at times one of the great disappointments of my life is that I did not have the opportunity to go through for law, but for once I am glad I did not go through for law.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Sudbury raised the matter about the fact that The Department of Highways did not expend the budget approved by the House last year. I want to assure him that this year's budget is a realistic budget.

I find that we voted $144 million last year and there was $136 million expended, a difference of $8,105,000, and that can be accounted for, whether it is good or bad, by the contractors in this province bidding away below the estimates of The Department of Highways in the past 12 months.

That accounts for $8,105,000. We estimated we would receive $10 million in refunds from the federal government on the Trans-Canada highway and the Queensway and actually we received $16.6 million, so we have received $6.6 million more than we anticipated, so that $14,705,000 is added to $8,105,000.

Then I find on maintenance of King's highways, a year ago, as many of us will recall, we did not have as much snow as usual, so we spent $1,614,000 less than we estimated for maintenance, mostly owing to the fact there was a light snowfall.

Then we also find that the municipal assistance was $4,145,000 less than we had budgeted for, or less than we expected.

Then I find another one here, $301,000, which was effected through economies in the department. That makes it up to the $20 million the hon. member spoke of.

Mr. Sopha: Perhaps the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) will remember, if he was in the House the other night when the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) refused to answer a question because there was no money voted for it in the estimates. Now I tender to the hon. Minister of Highways the converse:

where in these estimates is there a dollar asked for insurance premiums for the department's liability under section 33 of The Highway Improvement Act?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It is in the maintenance vote.

Mr. Sopha: Where?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It is included in the general maintenance.

Mr. Sopha: I have examined the public accounts for the last three years and I do not find anywhere in the public accounts a dollar for insurance premiums, nor do I find a recital of a five-cent piece for paying any liability, any judgments for damages under section 33 of The Highway Improvement Act. I do not see a reference anywhere in the public accounts for the last three years. Perhaps the provincial auditor had better have a look at the hon. Minister's department and see where that money is.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 701 agreed?

Mr. Singer: Oh, no! Just let us wait and see if we get an answer to some of these things.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) got so smart the other night about no money voted. Well, if they are using money, show us in the public accounts or in the estimates from which the money is coming.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) has quieted down now, the department carries the following insurance: fleet policy on autos, trucks and trailers, protection for public liability and property damage claims; fire and transportation policy, protection of vehicles from loss from fire or damage from being transported; non-ownership policies on motor-operated trucks and cars, protection from the Crown for third party claims not covered by employees' insurance, employees using own vehicles on authorized government duty; house-moving policy, protection from claims for negligence, Department of Highways employees supervising house-moving; road liability policy, protection from public liability or property damage claims made under The Highway Improvement Act; ferry liability policy, same protection for ferries as under road liability policies; ferry, hull and marine policies covers loss by collision, sinking, etc.; traffic counters policy covers losses by theft or damage to traffic counter equipment; Rainbow Bridge and Canadian Plaza policies, protection of public liability and property damage claims, also covers damage to heating and lighting equipment, plate glass, government maps, etc.; fidelity bond on staff.

Total insurance premiums paid by the department, and this can be found in the public accounts: 1958, $193,849; in 1959, $198,789; 1960, $196,110; 1961, $193,151; 1962, estimated $247,000; and these estimates, 1963, $270,000.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would table a breakdown. I understand that those charges cover all departments and when we tried to get this from another department we were told to inquire here. Would the hon. Minister give us a breakdown of that coverage as related to departments?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, according to the chief accountant we do carry complete insurance for all government departments and we recover approximately $100,000 a year. If the hon. member refers to the 1960-1961 estimates on 835, he will find an item there for insurance, $299,204.46. This is just for the information of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha).

Mr. Sopha: Why does the hon. Minister not insure himself?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do, but I pay my own premiums.

Mr. Sopha: Why does the hon. Minister bother sending it out? Why does he not self-insure? As far as I can tell, he never loses a case.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I would be afraid of is that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) might accuse us of playing political favouritism on our settlements. I think it is much better to have independent appraisals on these settlements.

Mr. Sopha: Then finally, does the hon. Minister believe it is right for a private insurance company to have the right to use all these legal devices, the prerogatives of the Crown, to defeat claims of litigants? Does he feel that is just?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, I would have to get advice from the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) or the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) as lawyers. I would not pass an opinion on this.

Mr. Sopha: Does the common-sense of the hon. Minister tell him? Cannot he tell by his own common-sense?

Let us put it this way. The Legislature having given a right to the litigant to sue the Crown, and derogation of the prerogatives of the Crown, does the hon. Minister then think it is right to interpose a third agency between the state and the litigant, to interpose a third agency in the form of a private insurance company that then uses all these pettifogging devices to defeat his claim? Does he think that is—does he believe that is the way government ought to be conducted, against the citizen? Is that what he believes?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I will let the hon. member know tomorrow. I will have to think it over.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I thank the Lord that I am for the poor plaintiffs. If the hon. Minister is for the insurance company and such pettifoggery as this, I am glad I act for plaintiffs.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, on page 14 of the hon. Minister's statement in regard to the qualifications for procedures; a final sentence in the paragraph is: "I am pleased to report that to date not a single contractor who was awarded one of our pre-qualified contracts has failed to satisfactorily complete the contract."

Did the contract for asphalt on Highway No. 401 between Cobourg and Brighton, which was given to the British American Oil Company, fulfil the pre-qualifications that the hon. Minister wanted? Does that jibe then, because I understand from this statement that the new asphalt is defective on 20 miles of 401—Cobourg to Brighton. If they certainly could not satisfactorily complete the contract, if the—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, in order to clarify this, the company that had the contract did not supply the asphalt. The Department of Highways supplies the asphalt to the contractor.

Mr. Troy: Where does The Department of Highways get the asphalt? They got it from the British American Oil Company, did they not?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Right.

Mr. Troy: Well, then, how can they satisfactorily—I suppose that satisfactorily completing the contract is giving the department some asphalt, no matter what it is. Defective asphalt—is that satisfactory?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, no. I do not know what—

Mr. Troy: Well, that is what the hon. Minister says in his paragraph.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I understand from the Deputy Minister that satisfactory settlement was made, as far as the department was concerned, from the oil company for this asphalt which was defective.

Mr. Troy: What was the settlement?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Offhand, the Deputy Minister says $15,000.

Mr. Troy: The damages were paid by the contractor; is that it?

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.
